Baker first came to the rescue of Love with two men out in the seventh inning and two Cleveland warriors resting on second and third base, each within scoring distance of the plate, and each anxious to register and thereby set back the Yankees again. Alva Williams was shoved into the breach at this point by Manager Lee Fohl to bat for Halt, and he did his utmost with a smoking grounder which appeared to be hastening past Baker toward the outfield. Baker threw himself at the ball, knocked down the speeding pellet, rescued it, and promptly threw it to Pipp in time to put out Williams at first and keep two Cleveland runs from clattering over the plate.

Miller's effort came one inning later when the Indians again were on the warpath and doing their best to break through the offerings of Love. Again two were on base, one at second and the other on first, and it was Tristram Speaker, the eminent war-club swinger, at the bat. Speaker had hit into a double play and lost an argument to Umpire Silk O'Loughlin when he struck out on his previous appearances, and he was in no mood to trifle with.

Love did not take this into account and sent the first ball across the middle of the plate, or rather he started it in that general direction. Speaker leaned against the ball and lined it over second base for a single, which appeared to be enough help to push at least one Cleveland run over the plate, a run which would have tied the score. With the crack of the bat Miller came running toward the infield. He scooped the ball up and with a perfect throw got it to Al Walters, at the plate, in time to head off the Cleveland runner plowing for home.

Love Weakens Toward End.

With such able assistance it was little wonder that Love triumphed. In the first part of the game Love did not need the help offered later, as for five and two-thirds innings not a hit was made off him and only two visitors had viewed the scenery around first base, both having got that far by bases on balls. However, from this point on Love was weakening, and it was only the unusual efforts of Baker and Miller that carried him to the finish line a victor.

The Yankees wasted many opportunities to decisively decide matters in the early innings. Twelve hits, including three doubles, were made off Bagby in the first six innings, yet only two Yankee runs were collected, and both of these were carted across the plate by Slim Love, who never before made any pretense of being a base runner, let alone a run getter.

Before the game began Herbie Thormahlen, the Yankees' young pitching sensation, was the recipient of a gold watch. Friends of Thormahlen from the Egbert Baseball Club of Jersey City, an amateur organization in which Thormahlen got his start, dug into their savings for the timepiece and presented it to their hero. Thormahlen promised to pitch within the next couple of days and let down his opponents without hit or run, just to please his Jersey comrades.

The usually pleasant Tris Speaker almost spent part of the afternoon in the clubhouse, following his unsuccessful swing at a third strike curved over the plate by Love in the seventh inning. Speaker had watched two curves sail by, both of which Umpire O'Loughlin called strikes, much to the consternation of Tris, who believed his batting eye was a better judge of such things than the judicial optic of O'Loughlin. Tris was so flustered by what he thought were O'Loughlin's mistakes he missed connection altogether with the third strike, and grumbled his way to the bench. He was not even satisfied then that O'Loughlin was right, and shouted to Silk that there must be a mistake.

"Yu better shut up or I'll roust yu out o'there," warned O'Loughlin, who has made 10,000,000 decisions during his umpirical career, and never has been wrong, according to his own statement. Speaker was shut and the game went on.

Walters on Duty Again.

Al Walters returned to active duty behind the plate, starting his first game of the season, and displayed his cleverness early by holding the wild Love into place. Walters was full of enthusiasm, especially when he singled on his first trip to the plate and registered his first hit of the year.

Walter Pipp was the only hospital patient after the battle, although Derrill Pratt went to the clubhouse with a spike wound in his left heel. Pipp bruised his wrist trying to steal home in the eighth inning after he had rested on third while Bodie and Miller popped out, vainly trying to register the big first baseman.

The Yankees began the game with a brilliant display of fielding which warmed up the holiday crowd. Eddie Miller, first up for Cleveland, received a pass, and Chapman tried to bunt, but lifted only a puny foul about twenty feet toward first base. Pipp raced in, slid his gloved hand under the ball and caught it before it hit the ground. Then Speaker bounded to Pratt, and his throw to Peck instantly started a double play which cut down Miller at second and Speaker at first. Cleveland never had another chance to score until the sixth.

The Yankees wasted hits like a spendthrift wastes his Thrift Stamps. Baker singled with two out in the first inning and was left when Pratt lined to Speaker. Pipp opened the second inning by beating out a hit to deep short and was forced at second by Bodie. Bodie got to second on Elmer Miller's infield out, and to third when Walters hit to deep short. A double steal was nipped easily, Bodie being out at the plate on Chapman's accurate return throw.

Love Counts First Run.

It took three hits and a pass to shove Loge over the plate in the third inning with the first Yankee run. Love began it with a single to right. Gilhooley beat out a bunt toward first base, when Eddie Miller held the ball as if in doubt what to do with it after he had fielded it. Peckinpaugh tried to sacrifice, but his effort was a pop fly to Bagby. Baker drove the ball toward right for a single and Love scored while Gilhooley went to third. Pratt walked and Pipp hit to Eddie Miller, whose throw forced out Gilhooley at the plate. Bodie grounded to Halt and Pratt was nipped trying to reach third.

Three more hits were made in the fourth inning and again only one run registered. Miller began with a single to centre, but Walters hit into a double play. Love got his second hit of the game, a fly that wafted over Joe Wood's head in left and gave Love a double. Gilhooley also doubled to left, scoring Love.

With one out in the fifth, Pratt singled, and died attempting to steal second. Pipp then singled, and was left when Bodie grounded out. Miller opened the sixth with a double to deep right field, which Bobby Roth made a desperate attempt to ensnare, but just failed to reach the ball. Walters popped out, Love fanned, and Gilhooley lifted a fly to Wambsgans, which wasted that effort.

After going hitless in the seventh, Pipp began the eighth with a tremendous drive to centre field, which Speaker allowed to get through him, and Pipp got to third. Bodie and Miller each popped out, and Pipp, by this time desperate, tried to steal home, only to be tagged out and to get a nasty bruise for his trouble.

Cleveland's only run came in the sixth inning, when, with two out, Eddie Miller drove the ball over Gilhooley's head in right field for three bases, and continued home when Pratt fumbled Gilhooley's return throw and then threw wildly to the plate.

GIANTS BUMPED BY CUB BATSMEN

Jess Barnes, in Farewell Appearance, Is Routed in First Inning.

ZIMMERMAN GETS OVATION

Heinie Presented with a Floral Horseshoe by Chicago Fans—Bruins Win, 7 to 4.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 25.—The farewell appearance in the box of Jess Barnes today provided the Cubs with an excellent opportunity to fatten their batting averages, for slim, trim Jess was not in his usual fine form, and was slugged from the pitching crest in less than one inning.

Al Demaree succeeded Barnes and Cecil Causey succeeded Al, but neither of the reserve hurlers was able to check the Cubs, so that the opening game of the series resulted in a defeat for the Giants by a score of 7 to 4. Lefty Tyler, erstwhile Brave, yielded eleven hits to the Giant batters, but was careful to keep the blows so well scattered that the league leaders were well-nigh helpless after the third inning. With perfect support, Tyler would have limited the Giants' total of runs to two, but errors by Rollie Zeider and Charlie Deal aided the New Yorkers in the scoring of their other two tallies.

The fans made much of the coming of the great Zim back to his one-time stamping ground. It had been predicted that Heinie would come in for an unpleasant reception at the hands of those who formerly cheered his name, but an agreeable surprise awaited the big third sacker. He was frequently cheered as he went through his practice stunts around the far corner, and when he stepped to the plate in the first inning he was presented with a floral horseshoe by a delegation of his admirers. The game was held up for a few minutes while Heinie acknowledged the gift and the plaudits of the multitude.

Tyler was bumped for two runs in the first inning by tallies resulting from clean and timely hitting. Young led off with a single to right and completed the journey around the sacks when Kauff slammed the ball to deep left field for two bases. Burns scored Kauff with a single to centre, and advanced to the middle station on Zimmerman's sacrifice, after which Tyler put on the screws. Fletcher was retired on a grounder to Zeider, and Holke was a victim on strikes.

The elimination of Barnes was brought about very speedily. Flack, the first batter to face him, drew a pass, and though Hollocker died on a screeching line drive to Young, Mann doubled to right, scoring Flack. That was enough for Barnes, and Demaree was called to the rescue. Merkle promptly laid a bunt down the third base line and beat it out, Mann reaching third, and when Paskert was thrown out on a grounder to Rodriguez, Mann counted.

The Giants forged ahead again in the third, tallying twice on singles by Kauff and Burns and errors by S. Deal and Zeider on grounders hit to them by Fletcher and Holke, respectively, but the league leaders did not retain the lead very long. Mitchell's men came back at Demaree with a rush in their half of the same inning.

"Perfecto Al" disposed of Flack and Hollocher, the first two men to face him in that stanza, but Mann and Merkle singled, Paskert doubled, and Deal tripled, and the three runs which resulted from the fusillade of hits put the Cubs again in front. Causey relieved Demaree in the fourth, and was nicked for the remaining two runs hung up by the home team.

In the fifth, Mann walked, stole second, and scored on Paskert's single, and in the sixth Tyler singled, continued on to second when Young botted the ball, and tallied from the middle bag when Hollocher slammed a single to right.

SAILORS TROUNCE N. Y. U.

Pelham Bay Nine Runs Up Score of 11 to 5 Against Violet.

Long hits on the part of the Pelham Naval Reserve baseball team caused the defeat of the New York University nine yesterday afternoon on Ohio Field with the score 11 to 5. The college men rallied toward the close of the game, but could not overcome the sailors' lead.

The Pelham men got the jump on the Violet in the first three innings by batting Sultzer out of the box. Povalski twirled for the 'Varsity from the third inning on and managed to check the heavy hitting of the sailors. Davies, the Pelham pitcher, was hit rather freely, but was backed up with exceptionally good fielding.

WEST SIDE TENNIS TEAM BEATS YALE

Eli Representatives Vanquished by Score of 8 to 1 at Forest Hills.

GARLAND WINS MATCH

Captain of Collegians Conquers Frederick Alexander in Straight Sets by 6—4, 6—3.

Yale University tennis players, headed by Chuck Garland of Pittsburgh, went down to defeat before the West Side Tennis Club representatives in a team match at Forest Hills yesterday afternoon by a score of 8 to 1. Six matches in singles were contested and three in doubles, and of this quota the New Haven collegians succeeded in taking only one of the singles encounters. It was the captain of the Yale team, Garland, who averted a complete rout when he succeeded in winning his way to victory in one of the first of the singles encounters.

His opponent was none other than the famous internationalist, Frederick B. Alexander, and that Garland could win his way through to victory in straight sets at 6—4, 6—3 over this master of the game proves once again that the Pittsburgh youth is one of the most proficient of the younger players. Ordinarily it would have been expected that Alexander would win, and he probably would have escaped defeat yesterday had he not been suffering from lack of practice. On the other hand it must be taken into account that Garland put forth one of the prettiest bits of tennis play that the season has uncovered. His watchword was steadiness. This is always true of his game, but yesterday it seemed that he was even more accurate and dependable than usual.

It has been said of Garland that he plays the base-line type of game, and in a sense this is true, but it would be more nearly accurate to say that he plays a mixture of both net and base-line game. He came to the forecourt yesterday with some clever volley shots, and from the deep court he was sending the ball to points of vantage with astonishing regularity. Alexander was a trifle unsteady. His drive was not working as well as usual and many of his shots were netted. It was at all times a sharp struggle, however, with no very great margin of advantage resting with Garland.

Yale Team Battles Hard.

The Yale team made a good showing in many of the other contests, but the margin necessary to victory always rested with the West Side players. Of the latter men there were in addition to Alexander, Walter Merrill Hall, G. Carlton Shafer, G. A. L. Dionne, Arthur S. Cragin, and Fred C. Baggs. Each of these contestants won his way to victory in straight sets, but each was at times pressed to display his greatest tennis lore. Hall triumphed over K. Simmons at 6—2, 6—2; Shafer defeated L. M. Banks at 6—4, 7—5, Dionne was victor over B. H. Morse at 6—4, 6—1; Cragin defeated L. H. Wiley at 6—3, 7—5, and Baggs beat R. L. Hamill at 7—5, 6—2. Considering this array of talent it was not strange that the Yale men failed to win more often.

In the doubles where the West Side team made a clean sweep, Alexander took a measure of revenge for his earlier defeat at the hands of Garland. The latter was teamed with K. Simmons of Yale and Alexander had as his partner another of the famous internationalists, Raymond D. Little. The play of the veterans provided some of the most interesting tennis of the day. For a few minutes at the start they did not find themselves, this being especially true of Little, but before long they were swinging along at a fast clip and cut down the early lead of the rival pair, and finally took the commanding position at 3—2. After that they always held the upper hand in the first set, winning at 7—5. The second set proved more easy, the score in this case being 6-2.

Simmons Is Unsteady.

Garland played his usual steady tennis, but he was handicapped by the erratic work of his partner, Simmons. The latter had good strokes, but he could not command them well and at times it appeared that he was trying to drive out home runs, so far did he hit the sphere.

Four of the leading women players took part in an exhibition doubles match. On one side were Mrs. Rawson L. Wood and Miss Eleanor Goss, while opposed to them were Miss Molla Bjurstedt, the national champion, and Mrs. Spencer Fullerton Weaver. At the end of two sets honors were easy. Mrs. Wood and Miss Goss succeeded in winning the opening clash at 7—5 and were beaten in the second set at 6—4.

SCHOOL GOLF TITLE PLAY.

Jamaica Team Defeats De Witt Clinton in P. S. A. L. Tourney.

Play for the annual Public Schools Athletic League golf championship, between the scholastic golfers of the local district, got under way yesterday at Forest Park, Queens, when the Jamaica High School team triumphed over the links representatives of De Witt Clinton High School by the point score of 5 to 4. The three matches were played over the last nine holes of the Forest Park course.

In accordance to the rules of the P. S. A. L. in each match a point score took the place of the usual results by holes. For match play two points went to the victorious golfer and for medal play one point to the leader in each match. A default, in which three Jamaica points were garnered, and a tie at match play with a medal play victory in another match, gave the Long Islanders the laurels of the competition.

The summaries:

L. W. Veit, De Witt Clinton, defeated A. Lawince, Jamaica, 2 up. Medal play—Veit, 44 strokes; Lawince, 54.

F. Fleischman, De Witt Clinton, forfeited to Gene Freyer, Jamaica.

B. Kerwick, Jamaica, and R. M. Cohen, De Witt Clinton, finished all even on nine holes. Medal play—Kerwick, 41 strokes; Cohen, 45.

Point score—Jamaica, 5; De Witt Clinton, 4.

GIRLS WIN TENNIS HONORS.

Miss Rice and Miss Aydelotte Gain Metropolitan Doubles Title.

In the final round of the girls' metropolitan doubles championship at the West Side Tennis Club at Forest Hills, yesterday morning, Miss Helen Rice and Miss Winifred Aydelotte won the title by defeating Miss Mary Jessup and Miss Louise Kreuter, at 6—3, 6—2. The victors showed a finely balanced game, and, with more severity in their play than could be brought to bear by their opponents, easily maintained the upper hand.

The first set was closely played for several games before Miss Rice and Miss Aydelotte succeeded in running out the opening clash. In the second set Miss Jessup and Miss Kreuter secured a two-game lead at the start, but the rival players then ran off six games for the set and the match.

CRAWFORD LEADS TEAM TO VICTORY

Wins Two Track Events, Setting One New Mark, in P. S. A. L. Games.

Robert Crawford of Flushing High School, local scholastic cross-country running champion, covered himself with glory yesterday at the annual high schools outdoor track and field championships and novice relay meet, held under the auspices of the Public Schools Athletic League at City College stadium. The Long Island school's star athlete was the biggest factor in bringing the team championship title to Flushing High School, won two track events, and in addition was the creator of a new P. S. A. L. record.

Mainly through Crawford's individual efforts Flushing H. S. compiled the winning total of 29 tallies, leading the representatives of De Witt Clinton H. S. in the battle for team supremacy by four points. Boys' H. S. athletes carried off third laurels in the team fight with 23 points. Last year's victorious team, the lads representing Jamaica H. S., finishing fifth in the team standing with 15 points.

Crawford won both the mile and half-mile races, and in the former competition he made his new local record. Running like the wind against a field of fifteen rivals, the Flushing hill and dale title holder wasted no time in demonstrating his superiority, but forged to the front almost at the start. He maintained his position easily, setting a stiff pace, which forced several of the starters to abandon the chase before the race was three-quarters completed. His closest adversary was a schoolmate, Schaeffer, but it could hardly be said that even Schaeffer was a rival of the champion's, for as he crossed the finish line Crawford had an advantage of more than 100 yards over the struggling Schaeffer.

Crawford's time for the mile journey was 4:34 1-5, eclipsing by one and three-fifths seconds F. Jenkins's mark of 4:35 4-5, made four years ago.

In the half-mile race practically the same story could be told of Crawford's triumph. His nearest rival again was Schaeffer, but by the time the finish line was reached the cross-country champion had a convincing margin of ground separating him from his schoolmate. In this race Crawford's pace fell off and his time, 2:05 1-5, was two seconds slower than the existing P. S. A. L. mark.

The meet was one of the most successful held in years. An unusually large number of entries was received for the various events on track and field, and this necessitated many trial heats, which carried the program through the entire afternoon. The crowd in and about the big stadium looked small, although there were about 1,500 admirers of the youthful track and field stars watching the performances, but whenever the opportunity was afforded the enthusiastic shouts greeting a worthy performance by a favorite echoed over the neighborhood.

Closely rivaling Crawford in point of meritorious performances for the day were Norman Hutson, a junior of Boys' H. S., holder of the P. S. A. L. junior 100-yard indoor title, and Reginald Austin, a colored runner of Jamaica H. S. Both these boys accounted for two victories, and, with Crawford, were the only double winners of titles.

Hutson showed speed in the sprinting events, winning both the 100 and 220 yard junior dashes in convincing style. His time for the century was 0:10 4-5, and in the 220-yard event he did 0:25 1-5. Austin's two titles were gained in the senior sprinting events at 100 and 220 yards.

Meinken of Manual Training H. S. showed considerable ability as a timber topper, winning the low hurdles events over 220 yards and gaining second to Slomka, Boys' H. S., in the 120-yard high hurdles event.

In the novice relay branch of the program, consisting of three relay races, High School of Commerce runners accounted for the team prize, winning by a margin of one point from Manual Training H. S. and Erasmus Hall H. S. Both these schools tied with seven points each. The Commerce quartet, Margulies, Burgess, Aronstein, and Sampson, won the one-mile relay without serious opposition, and in the half-mile event for 120-pound athletes the Commerce representatives gained second place to Erasmus Hall H. S. In the 100-pound relay, Stuyvesant High School's team finished first, but was disqualified for unfair touching off, and first place was awarded to Manual Training H. S.

Last year's novice relay champions were the representatives of Manual Training H. S.

YALE SHUTS OUT PENN.

Eli Keeps Slate Clean, Defeating Quakers, 5 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 25.—Yale and Penn, the only undefeated nines of Eastern universities, today clashed, Yale repeating its whitewashing exploits by inflicting a 5 to 0 defeat on the Quakers. Eddie Talcott allowed only four scattered hits, and passed his second batsman of the season.

Bernhardt was stormed by Yale in two innings, all the Eli runs being earned. Yale's defensive game was flawless, while its batting improved as the game advanced. Bernhardt fanned seven men, and apparently had the Yale batsmen helpless till the sixth, when singles by Boyd, Lyman, and Parker, followed by Holmes's three-bagger after two men had been retired, netted three scores.

The same Yale batsmen roughed the offerings of Bernhardt in the eighth when singles by Lyman, Parker, and Holmes pounded two more runs to the plate. Brilliant fielding by Prann, Lyman, and Sweeney featured the game, which left Yale with only Harvard to meet here next Saturday to finish its season.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 25.—Yale's well-balanced freshman track team today defeated Harvard '21 81½ to 35½ points. The visitors scored only two firsts during the afternoon. These were registered by Nally, who won the two-mile event, and by Krogness, who won the broad jump with 20 feet 4½ inches.

Xavier Nine Defeats Peekskill.

Xavier High School's baseball team took advantage of occasional poor playing by the Peekskill Military Academy nine yesterday in their game on the latter's diamond at Peekskill, N. Y., and romped away with a 4-to-3 victory. The Peekskill team played loosely at times in the field.

STAR AUTO PILOTS TO RACE THURSDAY

Array of Speedsters Will Meet in Harkness Handicap at Sheepshead Speedway.

The Harkness Handicap, the feature event of the automobile races to be held at the Sheepshead Bay Speedway next Thursday, Memorial Day, will bring together more than a score of the greatest drivers in the world in a speed clash at 100 miles for $30,000 in prizes and bonuses. It will be as important an auto contest as has been held recently, unless all early indications go for naught.

The Harkness Handicap will be the chief contest on the pretentious program arranged for the holiday, and next in importance will be the Futurity Handicap in two ten-mile heats and a final, which immediately precedes the Harkness.

In allotting the handicaps Fred J. Wagner, the veteran official who had charge of this part of the arrangements, placed Louis Chevrolet, the famous French pilot, on the scratch mark. This position was accorded Chevrolet because of his victory in the Harkness Gold Trophy last year, when he averaged 110 miles an hour for 100 miles.

The aim of the handicap system is to make the race an open one. For this reason the requests made by Ralph De Palma, Dario Resta, and Barney Oldfield that they be placed on scratch with their French rival was denied. The skill of the various drivers and the past performances of the cars were carefully considered in making the handicaps, and it is generally conceded that the starters will answer the gun on terms as nearly even as possible.

De Palma, world's sprint champion, will be next to Chevrolet with an allowance of one minute and one second. His keen rival, Resta, will receive an advantage of two minutes and two seconds. Resta was champion in 1915-1916. Ralph Mulford, a former Vanderbilt Cup winner, is allowed two minutes and five seconds.

Barney Oldfield, a member of the champion drivers for seventeen years, has a handicap of two minutes and ten seconds, while Eddie Hearne, the daring driver from Chicago, has been allowed two minutes and twelve seconds. Hearne is the latest entry to the race.

Next on the handicap list comes Tommy Milton, who increased his fame and popularity last year when he won the Providence Derby, defeating Louis Chevrolet. His handicap is 2:15. Ira Vail, the young Brooklyn champion, is to start 2 minutes and 21 seconds ahead of the scratch man. Milton's second, Duesenberg, for which the driver is as yet unnamed, is handicapped at 2:30.

Omar Toft, the sprint champion from the Pacific Coast, draws an allowance of 2:35. The two De Large cars of Harry S. Harkness, owner of the Sheepshead Bay Speedway and for whom the big handicap race is named, are put at 2:50 and 3 minutes. Dan Hickey, who finished fifth in the Harkness Gold Trophy last year, is handicapped at 3:10, and "Red Flash" Fetterman is assigned to the 4-minute mark.

Percy Ford, the Chicago millionaire and amateur champion of America, will leave the starting mark five minutes before Chevrolet, while Rudolph Wehr of Manhattan draws the limit allowance of six minutes.

While it will be a novelty for De Palma to start on anything but even terms in a race of the importance of the Harkness Handicap it is conceded by those familiar with the auto racing game that the time allowances made will go far toward making this one of the greatest speed contests ever held.

The wonderful skill of Chevrolet as a distance driver and his victory in the Harkness Trophy last year were the final arguments for placing the Frenchman on the scratch mark and the experts all agree that the allowance will give the virtually unknown a chance for victory. And it now seems certain that handicap racing will hereafter prevail in the realm of the auto because it furnished a competition of thrills for every foot of the journey and this is what is demanded by the public.

In the Futurity Handicap Resta and De Palma will be on the scratch mark. This race is certain to be bitterly contested because of the intense rivalry between these two and a victory is eagerly sought by each.

NEW LAFAYETTE CAPTAINS.

Kleinspehn to Lead Track Team and Keating the Nine.

EASTON, Penn., May 25.—Lafayette baseball and track teams have elected their respective Captains for next year. The track men have selected Walter G. Kleinspehn of Reading, Penn., champion miler and half-miler, to lead the team. Kleinspehn, although a senior this year, has shown himself so excellent a student, as well as an athlete, that he has been awarded a Fellowship, and will return to Lafayette next year to do post-graduate work.

The baseball Captain for next year is Paul Keating of Northampton, Mass. He was elected at the baseball dinner, held in advance of the close of the baseball season in order to permit three members of the team to attend who have been called to camp as members of the National Army. Captain Forrest, Hagy, and Tamborelli are the drafted men. The baseball "L" was awarded at the dinner to the following players: Moyer, Buechner, Hagy, Welles, Wainwright, Forrest, Keating, Hiltabidle, Anderson, and Tamborelli.

TIGER NINE SWAMPS HARVARD IN CONTEST

Princeton Makes Eleven Runs in First Inning and Wins Game by 16 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 25.—Princeton took hearty revenge for its defeat at Cambridge early in the season by sending the Harvard nine home on the small end of a 16 to 0 shutout. The Tigers relayed themselves around the bases in the first inning for eleven runs, while it took three Harvard twirlers to put an end to the onslaught.

Princeton played airtight ball, giving Kirkland magnificent support. Kirkland was the Tiger hero, allowing Harvard only four scattered hits, and getting a single and a two-bagger out of three times at bat. The visiting team tried in vain to stage a comeback, but never reached third base.

The first inning was a knockout blow to the Crimson rooters. The first three Harvard batsmen were out in order in the Princeton half of the inning. Struberg set the merry-go-round whirling by getting a pass and advancing to third on a wild throw to first. Madden, the Tiger Captain, walked, and Bade reached the initial sack on Hallowell's error, scoring Struburg and Madden. Horne, the next Tiger batter, also received a pass, and Horween, the Harvard twirler, was removed from the box, Newton taking his place.

Morry Trimble laid down a pretty bunt, advancing Bade and Horne, and Bauhan was the recipient of another free walk, filling the bases. Rogers refused to take any more of the Harvard gifts and knocked a liner over second, scoring Bade and Horne. A vain effort was made to catch Rogers at first but the throw was wild and Bauhan scored while Rogers romped home to third.

Sis Thompson lined one over third base for a safe hit, and Rogers crossed the plate with the sixth Princeton tally. Kirkland, the Nassau pitcher, proved his mettle by planting a two sacker out in left field while Thompson scored. Johnson, the third Crimson twirler, was sent into save the situation but found a badly muddled team behind him.

Jack Strubing started the second round of the inning for the Tigers by hitting an easy one to short. Strubing was safe on Wolverton's error, and Kirkland made Princeton's eight tally. Captain Madden placed a liner over second, sending Strubing home. Bill Bade tested the Crimson shortstop again and was safe on a wild throw. Madden scoring the tenth run. Horne sacrificed to left and Trimble, with two out, drew a walk. Trimble and Bade were advanced a base on a passed ball. Bauhan hit an easy one to Hallowell, but the Crimson third baseman hesitated too long, permitting Bauhan to deach first while Bade scored. Rogers ended the disastrous inning by flying out and the Tigers retired contented with their eleven runs.

The Harvard batsmen were powerless before Kirkland and were at no time in danger of scoring, while Johnson, the Harvard pitcher, found considerable difficulty in curbing the enthusiasm of the Tiger sluggers. In the second inning, with one out, the Princeton twirler hit again to left and Strubing followed with a hard smash through short. Ward, the Harvard left fielder, made a pretty catch of Madden's fly. With two down Bade knocked a liner over third, scoring Kirkland and Strubing. Horne ended the inning by rolling one to the Crimson pitcher.

In the fifth inning Horne reached first on an error and Trimble followed with a clean hit. Rogers made the initial sack on another costly misplay, allowing Horne and Trimble to cross the plate. With fifteen runs to their credit the Tigers were retired in short order.

Princeton got her final tally in the seventh with Horne and Bade on first and third. The Harvard pitcher almost caught Horne napping, but he tricked the Crimson infield by keeping on his way to second base. Bade scored while Harvard was busy catching Horne. The next two Tiger batters filed out, ending Princeton's gala day.

HOLY CROSS BEATS TUFTS.

Comes from Behind in Lively Encounter to Win by 5 to 2.

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., May 25.—After getting away to a two-run lead in the second inning, the Tufts nine was soon overtaken by Holy Cross, which rallied, scoring once in the second, and then took the lead in the third session, when two runs were sent over. In the seventh the winners counted two more tallies, the final score being 5 to 2.

The stick work of Bowen, who turned in two slashing doubles, had a lot to do with the victory. Both hits of his figured in the scoring. He also turned in a clever sacrifice. Gill pitched a heady game for Holy Cross, allowing only six hits, giving only one free pass, and fanning eight. The fielding work of Holy Cross was superior, the infield of Tufts being ragged. LONE TALLY ENOUGH TO DOWN FORDHAM

Cadets Get Four Safeties Off McQuade in Second Frame for Only Run of Game.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., May 25.—Fordham was beaten by the Army at baseball today in one of the closest and best played games of the season here by a score of 1 to 0.

The soldiers nicked McQuade for a quartet of safeties in the second, and, although the Maroons' sharp fielding cut down runners right and left in this frame, Haselhurst came through with the lone tally, McCarthy's wicked drive through short being sufficient. After that McQuade permitted no more hitting and only one man to reach second base.

Murrill was steady and was ably supported in the tight places. The game was considered second only to the Navy contest in the Army's estimation, and great stress was laid on the victory. It was Fordham's third defeat by a 1 to 0 score during this week. The fielding was marked by circus catches by Colletti and Halligan in the seventh.

TENNIS COMMITTEE TO DISCUSS VOTING

Executive Body of U. S. L. T. A. Will Meet at Chicago the Week of July 4.

EAST AND WEST AT ODDS

Session Indicates Effort to Settle Differences Between Sections on Question of Ballot.

Apparently the Executive Committee of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association is determined to thrash out to some definite conclusion the perplexing problem of equalization of voting power which was one of the bombshells thrown into the national association annual meeting a year ago last February. The determination to hold the next meeting of the Executive Committee in Chicago during the week of the clay court championship of the United States, July 4, and to give full sway to a discussion of the equalization question comes as something of a surprise to followers of tennis. When the subject was passed over at the annual meeting of this year it was thought that it would not come up again for serious consideration until the annual meeting of 1919.

The first discussion of equalization was really the outcropping of a side issue to the amateur question, for it was at the time that this latter subject was under consideration that L. H. Waldner of Chicago voiced the disapproval of the West and threatened secession if there were not a new apportionment of the voting power of the association. The secession idea die— own, but the West did not relinquish its hopes of having a more favorable adjustment of voting power for the middle and far western sections of the country.

At the last annual meeting Mr. Waldner sent a letter outling his ideas, and Julian S. Myrick, now acting President of the Tennis Association, outlined a counter plan which was more conservative. These two will probably be the basis of discussion at the coming meeting in Chicago, but whether a common ground can be found for agreement is doubtful. The West is jealous of the East, and maintains that there should be a sectional voting power in place of club voting. On the other hand it is Mr. Myrick's contention that voting power should follow the tennis population. As there are more tennist players in the East, this would, therefore, still have the balance of power along the Atlantic seaboard.

Purpose Is Outlined.

In a letter sent to the Executive Committee, the purpose of the coming meeting was outlined by Mr. Myrick as follows:

"The feeling of the Executive Committee is that representatives from all over the country should get together and discuss the general situation. The idea is to meet around the table, face to face, and see what is best to be done. Tennis is doing its part as a national sport, as well as the other national bodies, to promote and support patriotic endeavor. So we feel that a meeting of this kind where we could talk things over and come to some unanimous conclusions, would result in great benefit for the game. Matters of voting power, championships, ways and means to increase the popularity of tennis, will all be brought up for your consideration. If we can reach a unanimous agreement on these points, all well and good; if we cannot, no harm is done, but I feel now, more than ever before, it is our duty to get together."

Mr. Waldner, who is President of the Western Lawn Tennis Association, approves the suggestion most cordially, and other members are enthusiastic in their endorsement. The Executive Committee of the National Association is made up of eleven sectional delegates representing the sectional divisions of the United States and six delegates at large who are chosen by the annual meeting. These men, with the officers, comprise the committee which is mainly responsible for the conduct of tennis affairs.

Secretary Edwin M. Torrey has sent formal notice of the meeting to the committee members, urging them to spare no effort to be present. The significance of this move lies in the fact that it is plainly an effort to get a consensus of tennis opinion throughout the United States, not by correspondence or reports but from discussions by men who speak from first-hand knowledge of the sections they represent. Even though Chicago is three days' journey from the coast, it is expected that the representatives from the Pacific States will attend, so that the meeting may be truly representative of the national interests of tennis.

Frederick H. Hovey, Chairman of the Tennis Committee of the Montclair Athletic Club, has sent to New Jersey tennis clubs announcements of the State championship, which begins on June 10. For the first time in the history of the event it is now proposed to make the tournament a closed event for tennis players resident of New Jersey. Also this is probably the first time that any State championship in tennis has been closed in such manner. Heretofore, unlike golfers, the tennis men have been accustomed to travel from one tournament to another, and it is not unusual, therefore, to find a player from a far distant State winning, for instance, the championship of Florida or of Maryland.

To Stimulate Interest.

In speaking of the tournament Mr. Hovey says: "The winner will be a real New Jersey champion. The object in giving the tournament is not to provide an attraction for the Montclair Athletic Club, but to stimulate the interest in tennis in New Jersey, and to furnish an event in which no effort will be made to attract star players from outside, but every effort will be made to secure a large entry from our own local clubs. Every one will have a chance to win."

Men's singles and doubles will be played. Prizes will be offered in both events and the winner of the singles will obtain a leg on the championship of New Jersey bowl. Entries close on June 7 and should be sent direct to the Montclair A. C.

The recently formed Metropolitan Tennis Association has drawn up a schedule of team matches to extend through the Summer. Seven clubs are members of the new association, the West Side Tennis Club, Montclair A. C., University Heights Tennis Club, New York Lawn Tennis Club, Kings County Tennis Club, Westchester Country Club, and the Terrace Club of Brooklyn. The matches begin on June 8, when the Westchester Country Club team will play the Montclair A. C. representatives at Montclair. Twenty-one matches in all are on the schedule, the competition coming to an end the latter part of July. It is possible that after the close of the season there will be a team match between the will also be a team present from the Naval Reserves Training Station.

A number of exhibition tennis matches will be played for the benefit of the Red Cross on the courts of the Kings County Tennis Club in Brooklyn this afternoon. Among those who will take part in the events are Beals C. Wright, former internationalist and conqueror of Norman Brookes; Miss Eleanor Goss, one of the leading women players of this section, and Miss Marie Wagner, former national indoor singles champion. There will be a team present from the Naval Reserves Training Station.

Several tennis stars will take part in the exhibition matches at the County Tennis Club of Westchester this afternoon. Frederick B. Alexander and Harold Throckmorton will play in one match, and Miss Molla Bjurstedt, holder of the national singles championship, will also complete in a special match.

Major George T. Adee, President of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, is now on active duty in France, where so many of the country's leading tennis players are in service. Major Adee was commissioned at the second Plattsburg Camp last Summer, and was then assigned to Camp Dix, where he was connected with the Officers' School, and later with an infantry regiment.

'PERCHERS' MUST PAY TAX.

Revenue Bureau Rule Hits Those Who See Games from Roofs or Trees.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Persons who sell seats on any roof or structure overlooking a baseball park will be obliged to pay a war tax to the Government, according to an announcement issued by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The tax must be collected and paid by the enterprising owner or occupant of the building who receives payment for the seats occupied by "perchers."

The announcement says that in one city a woman whose yard adjoins the ball park has been selling seats in a tree, the prices being 5 and 10 cents, depending on how high the patrons have to climb. Recently the price has advanced to 6 and 11 cents, the extra cent being added to the war revenues.

The bureau also announced that admissions to outdoor amusement parks are not taxable. The tax does apply, however, to amusements within the grounds such as sideshows and moving picture theatres.

STRETCH EXCITES BOBBIES.

London Police "Investigate" Seventh-Inning Yawn at Ball Game.

LONDON, Saturday, May 25.—An eleven-inning game marked the recent opening of the Anglo-American baseball season. The score was:

Navy	6	5	6

Admiral Sims threw out the first ball to General Biddle. The umpire was Arlie Latham, former New York Giant star. It was the first baseball game ever played at the Arsenal football grounds, Highbury. The spectators included Admiral Palmer of the British navy, Captain William Archer Redmond, son of the late John Redmond, and many Londoners who saw the American game for the first time.

The American rooters were so excited in the ninth inning, with the score a tie, that three airplanes sailed over the field almost unnoticed. The grandstand was colorful, with the women's dresses, the American and British khaki, and the various shades of the blue worn by the American and British sailors. It was ideal baseball weather and many fans were without their coats for the first time this Spring. When the Americans "stretched" after the seventh inning, the police, attracted by the unusual scene, started an investigation.

The rooters called the navy team the "Depth Bomb Shooters," and the army was known as the "Grenade Throwers." The Londoners were much amused by the American baseball slang.

A league has been organized with three army and one navy teams ... the American forces and four Canadian teams from the London headquarters. The attendance was about 7,000.

BOYNTON WILL HEAD NINE.

Star Quarter Back Acting Leader of Williams Team.

WILLIAMSTOWN, May 25.—Jerry Carick of New York, who was recently elected Captain of next year's Williams football eleven, has left college to enlist in the navy, joining the steadily growing group of former Purple athletes now with the colors. He played 'Varsity football as well as basketball, holding down an end position on last year's undefeated Williams eleven Carrick was a member of the sophomore class, and he prepared for Williams at De Witt Clinton High.

An unusual honor has been given Benny Boynton, Williams' football star and all-American quarter. Despite the fact that he is a sophomore, he has been named acting Captain of the 'Varsity baseball nine, succeeding Dunn, who left college some time ago to join the colors. It is the first year that Boynton has performed regularly on the Purple nine, but his work at shortstop has been of a high order, while he is leading the nine in batting. Besides, Boynton is a natural leader and has the faculty of putting lots of fight into his fellow players.

EVENTS FOR ENLISTED MEN.

Five Competitions for Service Athletes on N. Y. A. C. Program.

The official program of events for the centenary games of the New York Athletic Club at Travers Island, June 8, have been anounced and entry blanks distributed. The events adopted include five for enlisted men of the army, navy, and National Guard; eight open A. A. U. handicap competitions, and one event for schoolboys, making fourteen competitions in all. The entries will close June 1, and no one will be allowed to start in the games whose name does not appear on the program.

The events for enlisted men are mostly team competitions, and will be held under Military Athletic League rules. They include a one-mile handicap relay race between teams of ten men, each running 176 yards; 60-yard equipment race, 60-yard rescue race for teams of two men, medicine ball contest for teams of twenty men, and a hand grenade throwing contest. Elimination trials in the latter event will be held at noon on the day of the games, and the ten competitors with the highest scores will compete in the finals at 2:30 P. M. Both elimination scores and final scores will, however, count in determining the winner. In all events service uniforms must be worn by the contestants. No entry fee will be required for the enlisted men's tests.

The open A. A. U. handicap events include 100-yard dash, 440-yard run, 880-yard run, two-mile walk, running high jump, putting 16-pound shot, one-mile run, and 16-pound hammer throw. The hammer throw will be held at noon. The schoolboy event will be a 600-yard run for students of preparatory and high schools.

N. Y. U. MEN GET LETTERS.

'Varsity Insignia Awarded to Seventeen at Local College.

Seventeen men received their 'Varsity letters at a meeting of the New York University Athletic Association. There was also an assignment of nine 'Varsity numerals for meritorious services in the track and baseball branches of athletics. Freshman class numerals were received by twenty members of the first class.

Acting Track Captain Harold B. Finley was elected captain of the track team for next year. Finley was acting this season in the place of Cy Crowther, who is in the service. Charles Zeuner was elected manager for the coming schedule.

The awards were as follows:

BASEBALL.—Letters—Captain Tetelman, Manager Billo, Egan, Klaess, Draffen, Connell, Bromley, Covello, Loew, Sulzer. Numerals—Assistant Manager Christopher, Esquirol, and Povelski.

TRACK.—Letters—Acting Captain Finley, Parry, Magida, Stinson, Seiffert; also to Manager Miller and Captain Crowther now in the service. Numerals—Assistant Manager Zeuner, Egan, Weinlander, Cunliffe, Tiger, Friedlander.

FRESHMAN CLASS NUMERALS.—Baseball—Captain Delaney, King, McAuliffe, McAdam, Brodsky, Josephson, Cram, Hoeman, Hauser, Liss, and Strassman. Track—Streitel, Jewell, Bartlett, Brodick, Kandel, Decker, Zunser, and Kavanaugh.

TO PLAY HANDICAP TENNIS.

Metropolitan Event Will Begin at Forest Hills Tomorrow.

Following out the suggestion by the United States National Lawn Tennis Association that clubs hold handicap tournaments this season, Charles S. Landers, President of the West Side Tenni Club, announces that a metropolitan handicap event will begin on the West Side courts tomorrow. Men's singles only will be played.

This is the first metropolitan handicap tournament to be undertaken in years, and the West Side Club is hopeful that a large number of players will avail themselves of the chance to enter the event. No match will be played before 4:30 in the afternoon, thus enabling men to compete after business hours. The committee in charge is composed of R. W. Gifford, Fred S. Alexander, G. A. L. Dionne, H. C. Guller and William A. Campbell.

CUDGEL GAINS PALM FOR EARLY RACING

Son of Broomstick Gets Good Start in Handicap Division of Thoroughbreds.

3-YEAR-OLDS IN MUDDLE

Motor Cop Arrives in Front by Defeating Jack Hare, Jr., and Sun Briar at Jamaica.

One of the most successful race meets held by the Metropolitan Jockey Club closed yesterday, or at least the first session, for the meeting will run for another six days, after the sport has been continued for eighteen days at Belmont Park under the auspices of the Westchester Racing Association. The patronage of the public on several days surpassed all previous records and testified to the interest at a time when public support is needed to indorse the claim of the racing authorites that tests on the track are essential for the advancement of breeding of horses.

Though there were plenty of thrilling contests during the nine days' session, it cannot be said that the sport at Jamaica did much toward solving the problems as to which horses are the best in their respective divisions. New candidates for honors were brought forward, but the racing was not decisive enough to retire the old champions.

Cudgel, owned by Commodore J. K. L. Ross, demonstrated that he is all that the Westerners claimed for him, but the failure of Omar Khayyam to enter the lists against the son of Broomstick gave him no opportunity to confirm the victory gained over last year's three-year-old champion in Maryland. With Old Rosebud and Hourless out of the way, for the present at least, the supremacy in the handicap class will have to remain in abeyance until Cudgel and Omar Khayyam meet. This is not likely to take place until the Suburban is run at Belmont Park on June 8, and the hope of turfmen is that both will go to the post for that historic event and that they will carry equal weights over the regulation distance of a mile and a quarter.

Cudgel is burdened with a penalty for winning at Jamaica that will bring his weight for the Metropolitan Handicap to be run tomorrow up to 135 pounds, and it is almost certain that neither he nor Omar Khayyam will start in the opening day feature at Belmont.

The crack three-year-olds had only one chance to make a display at Jamaica, and that was under handicap conditions and at six furlongs, a distance that does not provide an adequate test for a thoroughbred. The Stuyvesant Handicap for horses of this age, which was run last Tuesday, served to introduce a new claimant for the honors in A. K. Macomber's Motor Cop, which made his first appearance this season and raced away from such stars as Jack Hare, Jr., and Sun Briar. As Motor Cop was in receipt of a liberal allowance from the two cracks his victory was by no means conclusive.

Sun Briar's performance certainly was disappointing, as he was soundly beaten by Jack Hare, Jr. Last year's two-year-old champion looked big enough to race with the best, but he appeared sluggish and in spite of the recommendation of his trainer did not seem to be up to a race that called for great speed. Sun Briar will have a chance to redeem himself in the Withers next Saturday, but Jack Hare, Jr., is not named for that event and Mr. Kilmer's horse will have to test his merit against others of his age. Motor Cop is among the eligibles, and, moreover, Mr. Macomber has War Cloud to carry his colors, a dangerous contender surely, as he won one section of the Preakness Stakes, while Jack Hare, Jr., captured the other. August Belmont's Lucullite, which was badly injured after showing great form as a two-year-old, is another rod in pickle for this event, which is likely to produce a contest equal to that of last season when Hourless just got home in front of Rickety.

The chief contest for two-year-olds decided at Jamaica was the Colorado, run on Thursday. It was won by Walter M. Jefford's Star Hampton, but it is scarcely believed that this colt is the best yet seen under colors, while there are several with great private reputations which have not yet faced the starter. Star Hampton, for instance, was beaten on Tuesday by John Sanford's Ute, and his form was still further discounted when the Brighton Stable's Lord Brighton ran away from Ute on Friday.

In winning the Colorado Star Hampton, though he proved a good, game colt, had more than his share of luck. His most formidable contender was Yurucari, a colt owned by Mr. Sanford that is believed to be far superior to Ute. Yarucari was knocked back at the start, yet at the finish he was gaining rapidly on Star Hampton. There are many important two-year-old stakes at Belmont, but Star Hampton is only engaged in one of them, the Keene Memorial, that will be run quite late in the meeting.

The success scored in England this Spring by the get of Polymelus should be gratifying to W. R. Coe and A. K. Macomber, who have more of the blood of this famous horse than anybody else in the United States, the latter turfman having for the last two years bought the entire yearling crop of J. B. Joel with the exception of three or four fillies, which were reserved for breeding purposes. Already the critics are likening Lord Londonderry's great 3-year-old filly Benevente to Sceptre and Pretty Polly, as she has shown ability to concede weight and beat the colts of her year. Benevente is by Polymelus out of Pearmain, and she gave evidence of coming greatness when as a 2-year-old she won the Middle Park Plate—a victory which usually means favoritism in the Derby the following year.

But for the war it is safe to say that very little of this prized leaven would have found its way to this country, as it has been closely held and in most cases absolutely unpurchasable. It has taken some time for the foreign bred contingent to become acclimated here, but this season as it progresses will find the English and French horses playing a more dominant part than hitherto.

Last season, with Hourless, Omar Khayyam, and Sun Briar dominating the situation, the foreigners seemed to have the advantage. This season to date the honors must be accorded to Cudgel, which is more or less American in his makeup, though Broomstick's dam, Elf, was an imported daughter of Galliard, while the sire of his dam, Eugenia Burch, was a daughter of imported Ben Strome, a mediocre performer on the turf, but, like many other English horses, a success when mated with our pure American mares.

While tomorrow's card has merit, there are many offerings later in the week which should bring the public to Belmont Park, which is now at its very best. The Garden City Handicap will be the stake feature on Tuesday, while the Hollis Stakes on Wednesday should be productive of good sport. The fleetest of the two-year-olds will make their appearance in the Juvenile Stakes on Thursday, while the Toboggan Handicap, to be run on the same day, will call for the kings and queens of the sprinting division. Friday's card will be featured by the Searington Handicap. Saturday will witness the running of those great classics the Withers and Fashion stakes, reminiscent of the days at Jerome Park when D. D. Withers, August Belmont, John Hunter, Leonard and Lawrence Jerome, George and Pierre Lorillard, and Judge Alonzo Munson were names to conjure with and there was sentiment in racing.

ROSS WILL LEAD HARRIERS.

C. C. N. Y. Elects Captain for Cross-Country Team.

Maxwell C. Ross of the 1920 class was elected Captain of the cross-country squad of the College of the City of New York at a special meeting of the team to lead the harriers next Fall.

George Lehrman, class of 1919, will lead the C. C. N. Y. Athletic Association next year; Max Fisher will be Vice President, Jerrie Schwartz Treasurer, Maxwell Ross Secretary, and George Feigin, who is a twirler for the cubs, property manager.

The managers will be: Sid Goodfriend, basket ball; Artie Taft, assistant; Henry Davidow, Press Bureau staff, swimming, with Dave Bunin assistant; Jack Feltman, tennis; Irv. Lipton, soccer; Charlie Diamond, assistant track.

TWO MORE LATE ENTRIES.

Rutgers and Brown Will Compete at Intercollegiate.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., May 25.—The war has not affected the entry list for the forty-second annual track and field championships, which will be fought out on Franklin Field Friday and Saturday, to the extent that had been feared. Twenty-one universities and colleges have entered full teams, there being more than 700 individual entries. This is approximately the same number of competing institutions as heretofore, and there will be virtually as many actual starters as in previous years. It is true that there have been more individual entries in former years, but this year, on account of the necessity to keep down expenses, the various colleges have entered only the men they expect to start. There has been no wholesale entering of men whose coaches do not expect them to start.

Pittsburgh and Harvard were not the only belated entries as originally announced. Two more, Rutgers and Brown, have come along since. This means that the entries of these four institutions will have to come up at the special meeting of the I. C. A. A. A. A. at the Bellevue-Stratford Friday morning. Official notice has already been sent for this meeting, and the association will be asked to suspend the by-laws so that these entries may be accepted. It is virtually certain that nobody will oppose this request.

With Pittsburgh as one of the competitors the interest in the big meet has increased. Pittsburgh is likely to be a heavy scorer, but not heavy enough to change the verdict of most of the experts that Cornell ought to be returned the winner. Princeton's chances have been considerably reduced with the announcement that Sinclaire, the shotputter, and Raymond, the star distance man, have both left college to begin their military lives. The Tigers, however, have the nucleus for a splendid team, and most coaches think they will be the ones to give Cornell a fight for first place.

There is nothing to the talk about any extended use of freshmen by the big universities. Cornell was prompt to deny the report that the Ithacans would use their first year men. Dartmouth is the only big university which will use freshmen. The Hanover institution amended its eligibility rules a year ago so that it might use freshmen. As a result they have entered all of their best first year men and are likely to have a little advantage on that account.

In trying to work out a table of likely point winners the track and field sharks have had their hands more than full. There are so few veterans in college that there is almost nothing on which to form a judgment. Cornell is fancied a winner, for the reason that the Ithacans have a splendid collection of middle and long distance runners. Coach Moakley has not taken any one into his confidence, but the feeling prevails that he will make the best possible use of Ivan Dresser, his star distance man. It is believed that Dresser will start in both the mile and two mile runs. If he can win them both he will be the first man in intercollegiate history to accomplish it.

Some of the best long-distance men the college world has ever produced have tried it, but not one has ever succeeded. In 1900 John Cregan of Princeton tried it. He first won the mile in 4:24 1-5. An hour later he came out for the two-mile run, but, although the pace was not severe, he was obliged to drop out and did not even finish the race. In 1903 W. A. Colwell of Harvard won a slow mile in 4:30 3-5. He, too, tried to repeat in the two-mile event, and while he did not win, he did better than any man before or after him who ever made this double effort. He finished a bad fourth. In 1912 Cornell virtually lost the intercollegiate championship by attempting to double up.

Berna, who had the two-mile run at his mercy, was started in the mile in the hope that he and John Paul Jones, also of Cornell, could win first and second in this event. The result was a tremendous disappointment for not only was Berna compelled to accept fourth place, but Jones was so badly worried that he was almost defeated and obliged to submit to a tie with Tabor of Brown. Thus Cornell, instead of getting eight points in the mile, scored only four. Not only that, but Berna was later badly beaten in the two-mile run.

If Moakley attempts it this year it will be because he feels that the field of competitors is far below the standard. There is no question that Dresser is the best mile runner in the college world. Last Winter he did 4:25 on an indoor track with flat rubber-soled shoes. He has speed enough for a 1:58 half mile. In addition, he is the intercollegiate cross-country champion. There is no doubt he will be taking big chances to attempt both.

Another man who will have to be reckoned with in the mile is Kleinspehn of Lafayette. This youngster without a pacemaker won the mile in the Middle States meet last week in 4:27 3-5, the fastest mile that has been run by a college man this Spring.

The Pittsburgh team has the other colleges somewhat worried. Shea is given first place in the quarter-mile run by unanimous consent. He is likely to score in the 220-yard dash as well. Pittsburgh has another first-class man in Sutherland, the hammer thrower. He is reported to have thrown the hammer more than 150 feet this year. If he can duplicate this next Saturday he will certainly win. Pittsburgh also has a first-class man in Albright for the half-mile.

Dartmouth by the use of freshmen will have a pretty well rounded team, with her strength distributed through the sprints, hurdles, and pole vault. Of the other competitors not much is known. Michigan has several high class competitors, notably Johnson, who is likely to score in the 100 yards, the high hurdles and perhaps the broad jump. Donnelly is good for close to 4:25 in the mile run. The feeling among the Eastern men is that Michigan must have a rattling good team or it would not be sent East.

RED CROSS DAY PLANNED.

Murphy to Conduct Series of Light Harness Events on June 22.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., May 25.—Thomas W. Murphy, famous as a trainer and driver of light harness horses, is to give a Red Cross day at the Hudson River Driving Park, this city, on the afternoon of Saturday, June 22. At that time exhibitions will be given by three world's champions, fifteen two-year-olds in the Murphy stable will be driven to standard records, and there will be two races, each for a purse of $100, entrance to be free and the purses to be donated by Mr. Murphy. The entire proceeds of the day will be turned over to the Dutchess County Chapter of the Red Cross.

Directum I., 1:56¾, champion pacer of the world, holding the records for one-quarter, one-half, and mile in the open, will give an exhibition mile. He is now owned by Mr. Schurter of Ellenville, who has agreed to bring him down to Poughkeepsie and drive him in his performance. The old champion is reported to be in fine condition.

Miss Harris M., the first pacing mare to be driven a mile in two minutes, now in Mr. Murphy's stable, will be driven an exhibition mile by the premier reinsman. The third world's champion to perform during the afternoon will be The Real Lady, 2:03, champion as a two-year-old and a three-year-old. She will be driven by Murphy.

The classes for the races have not yet been announced. The Murphy stable will start some horses in these races, and any part of the purse that they may win will be turned over to the Red Cross by Mr. Murphy.

YALE AND HARVARD ROW ON NEW COURSE

Ancient Rivals to Meet on the Housatonic River in Struggle Between Eights.

SMALL CROWD IS EXPECTED

Management of Race Making Little Preparation to Handle Spectators—Train May Run.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 25.—Yale and Harvard will resume rowing next Saturday in 'Varsity racing after a two years' lapse. Their race will be doubly noteworthy in that it marks the opening of a course which promises to become prominent in future intercollegiate rowing. It will be the first race which has ever been rowed on the Housatonic River, a course which Yale has picked out for its regular Spring and Fall practice training and for some of its home races, if not as the home of the future Yale-Harvard rowing events.

In accordance with Yale's wartime athletic policy, the race will be quietly rowed, with no attempts on the part of the rowing management to attract a large attendance or special enthusiasm or excitement. At the Yale-Harvard regattas in New London, on the Thames, observation trains, crowded to their limit are run on each side of the course, and yachts line the course for a distance of two miles. A small observation train may be arranged for, but the only other manner possible to see the race will be from autos, which follow the crews over the course.

There is an excellent State road on one side of the course and a large number of autos trail along this in full sight of the crews. The Berkshire Division of the New Haven Railroad runs close to the course, along the other bank, and it is now planned to run a train on it for the benefit of the spectators.

Professor Mather Abbott, the Yale crew coach, declared the race was arranged in order that the oarsmen might have an objective to their training and something to look forward to at the close of their season, rather than as a public event.

Next Saturday Yale's athletic season closes for the school year, and the baseball games with Harvard and the rowing race with that university have been scheduled for that date. The baseball contest will be played early enough so that the crowd can go to Derby to see the boat race, which it is planned to row about 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

Not more than 8,000 persons are expected at the baseball game, and it is not believed that more than half of this number will journey to the Housatonic course for the boat race. The course lies just north of the City of Derby, about fifteen miles from New Haven.

The only handicap to the course is its distance from the Yale campus and the impossibility of getting there quickly, except by automobile. A good two-mile course, below the City of Derby and on the Housatanic River, has been used by the Yale oarsmen for practice purposes for two years, previous to last year. This is a mile nearer New Haven than the other, and the trolley from New Haven runs directly past it.

Since the Pennsylvania race the Yale eight has been entirely shifted. It contains three veterans, Captain Hyatt, Mead and Vail. Hyatt, who has been stroke for three seasons, has been continued in that position. Vail has been at No. 7, but he has been shifted to No. 3; Mead, who was in that position, going to No. 7. Mead is a sturdy football player and wrestler and probably the strongest oarsman in the shell. Hyatt is an almost perfect waterman, but not a rugged athlete. The statistics of the crew as it expects to meet Harvard follow:

Pos. and Name.	Home.	Wt.	Ht.	Age.
Stroke—A. R. Hyatt	Meriden	165	6.00	22
No. 7—W. Mead	Bronxville	174	5.10	20
No. 6—W. L. Austin	Rosemont, Penn	160	5.11	18
No. 5—L. G. Adams	New York	172	5.10	20
No. 4—J. B. Knox	Wallingford, Conn	178	6.00	18
No. 3—D. T. Vail	Cincinnati	165	5.10	20
No. 2—C. D. Munson	Wallingf'd	160	5.09	19

MEET AT POLO GROUNDS.

A. A. U. to Conduct Games for Soldiers Today to Aid Fund.

The Polo Grounds, usually the home of baseball, will this afternoon be the scene of one of the most extensive athletic events ever undertaken by the Metropolitan Association of the A. A. U. Baseball, amateur boxing, and track and field sports are on the card arranged for the purpose of securing funds with which athletic activities work can be carried on by the association at local camps and training stations and at Fort Slocum and Camp Dix.

The authorities of both Fort Slocum and Camp Dix are assisting in the work of carrying today's program to successful completion, lending their labors and also the athletes under their supervision to the occasion, and it is expected that their finances for athletic activities will be considerably replenished as a result of the sport.

Four running races, one high jump contest, and a weight event comprise the track program, while the boxing card consists of bouts between amateurs at 115 and 140 pounds. The baseball conflict will bring together the team of the 349th Field Artillery, Camp Dix, composed principally of former members of the Lincoln Giants, and the Fort Slocum nine, led by Ray Fisher, erstwhile Yankee pitcher. This promises to be one of the principal events of the afternoon, as there is intense rivalry between the two army camps.

For the athletic and boxing events, the unusual entry of about 400 individuals has been received for the six competitions and two classes. This in itself would seem to indicate a lively day's sport. Admission to the grounds will be free, but the officials will take up a collection, in which it is hoped to raise a large sum.

Final arrangements for the meet were completed yesterday at a meeting of the committee in charge of the various events. In reviewing the entries the names of many track and field champions were found among the athletes who have signified a willingness to compete, and the same is true of the boxing classes, in which New York State and metropolitan district title-holders have entered.

The biggest entry was received for the two-mile handicap run, in which it is expected Villar Kyronen, local senior cross-country champion, and Charles Pores of the Pelham Bay Naval Training Station, former holder of the title, will match strides. They will start from scratch against a field of eighty-five rivals and in this gathering will be the foremost long-distance performers in the local district.

In the 600-yard handicap race it has been found advisable because of the large entry to provide for eight heats. The scratch starters in this race will be James J. O'Brien, Loughlin Lyceum, local champion at this distance, and Jack R. Sellers of the New York A. C., holder of the junior national A. A. U. 1,000-yard indoor title. In the 100-yard handicap dash there will be ten trial heats with three semi-finals and the standard of large entries has also been followed in the half-mile handicap run.

The feature of the two field events promises to be the 56-pound weight throw over a bar for height, this style being employed in this competition for the first time in many years. Matt McGrath and Pat McDonald, both holders of national weight titles, will be the principal rivals.

For the boxing classes exponents of the sport have turned out strongly, and the result is that between ten and fifteen bouts will take place.

CORNELL HOPEFUL OF WINNING MEET

Coach Moakley Expects to Enter Men in Every Event at Philadelphia.

DRESSER TRAINING AGAIN

Will Strive for Two-Mile Record at Intercollegiate Title Contests This Week.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 25.—If the men who constitute the bulk of the track team Cornell will enter in the intercollegiate games next Friday and Saturday at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, come up to expectations, the Ithacans hope to win first place in the meet again. Cornell will enter some twenty-five to thirty men, and Jack Moakley expects to put entries into every event on the program.

Cornell will do best in the runs, hurdles, and broad jump, it is expected, and there are hopes for points in the sprints, with a possibility of picking up a point in the pole vault and high jump. Although the Ithacans will have representation in the weights, not much hope is held out for points here.

The meet, according to Coach Moakley, will bring out some close competition, and he expects that more men than usual will be entered in more than one event on the program. Among the Cornellians, for instance, Smith, Cleminshaw, Shackleton, Mayer, and possibly others will take part in more than one event. The absence of stars will throw the result in the balance, Moakley thinks, giving the men who are taking part on 'Varsity teams for the first time in their lives the chance to settle the issue.

Although Ivan Dresser has only resumed training this week after a two weeks' lay-off, Cornellians are confident that he will be in form and that the two-mile record will go by the board. Dresser injured two toes in the M. I. T. meet, and could not put on a shoe for a long time. The other Cornell men are in good shape, though, and some of them have been permitted to go home until the date of the meet. Men allowed to go home are expected to keep in training. This is the first time that this practice has been allowed, but war-time conditions have brought about an informality in athletic methods.

In the sprints Coach Moakley will probably enter Shackleton, Coltman, and Robinson, none of them first rate men. Smith and Cleminshaw are expected to score in both hurdles, and Bickford will also be entered. Mayer is the big gun for Cornell in the 440 and 880. He is expected to score in both. Herrick and possibly Swartz will run the 440 also, while Abreu will back Mayer in the half. Maynard is the best miler at Cornell and it is confidently expected that he will score well. Huber and Seelbach will also run this race, while in the two-mile Peck and Stanton will support Dresser.

Smith and Shackleton are both good broad jumpers, capable possibly of 22 feet. Heartsfield and Felter have been doing 21 feet 5 inches. Meyers, the best high jumper, is not in very good shape, due to an injury. His companion in this event, Stone, has done 5 feet 6 in competition. Grigson, the best pole vaulter, has yet to do 11 feet 6 in competition. Leonard, an 11-foot man, will also compete in this event, while Bangs and Quayle will enter the weight events.

WESTCHESTER SHOW EARLY

Annual Gedney Farm Attraction to be Held in June.

In response to the desires of exhibitors it has been decided to hold the annual Westchester Horse Show in the early Summer this year instead of in the Fall. The show, which is one of the most attractive of Westchester County's open air events, will be held at Gedney Farm, White Plains, on June 19, 20, 21, and 22. This will be the twenty-fifth annual exhibition and will be held for the benefit of the Westchester County Chapter of the Red Cross.

The prize list offers seventy-one classes and they are specially well allotted to the different breeds. For the hackney and heavy harness horse there are twenty-three classes, while the saddle horse has twenty-one and the jumper fourteen. There are also twelve other events for roadsters, troopers' mounts, and ponies in harness and under saddle, including polo mounts. Troop K of the New York State Troopers is stationed at Gedney Farm and there is a special class for horses owned by members of that troop to be shown under saddle.

Those giving prizes are Mrs. George S. Wallen, Charles D. Lanier, Mrs. W. H. Hanley, George S. Wallen, William H. Moore, Edwin Gould, John I. Downey, J. Rich Steers, W. E. Day, J. Campbell Thompson, C. M. Greer, Jr., P. A. Rockefeller, Oliver Harriman, E. von der Horst Koch, Hugh J. Chisholm, William Ziegler, Jr., O. J. Gude, William E. Iselin, F. M. Warburg, and James C. Brady. The George C. Clausen prizes are for the first and second awards in the class for polo ponies.

The judges selected are George L. Hulme, harness class; J. Garner West, saddle classes, and G. Jason Waters, hunters and polo mounts.

The Horse Show Committee comprises Ernest Iselin, J. Campbell Thompson, P. A. Rockefeller, G. D. F. Leith, John McE. Bowman, and John I. Downey.

The entries will close Saturday, June 8, with the Secretary, W. S. Blitz, 35 Nassau Street, New York City.

MINUTE MAN SIX

Immediate Deliveries!

Visit our showroom. Select the model you prefer. And drive your car away. No waiting. No promises. The cars are here NOW.

MOTOR.
"Continental," America's standard motor. Small 3¼ inch bore motor insures economy in gasoline consumption, at the same time providing over-power, because of the Moore Multiple Exhaust, an exclusive Lexington feature.

EXHAUST.
The Moore Multiple Exhaust, patented and controlled by the Lexington Motor Company, is designed to double the intervals between explosions in the exhaust manifold, enabling the motor to more thoroughly scavenge itself and eliminating trapped gases—doing away with back pressure.
In a test made in the Wheeler & Schebler laboratories, a Continental motor equipped with this exhaust, developed 22.8 more power than the same motor equipped with the single exhaust used by all other motor cars.

BODY.
Built entirely in the Lexington factory.

FRAME.
Minute-Man Six is built on the Brush one-piece frame—light in weight but possessing extraordinary strength owing to the patent principle involved. The steel running boards, cross members, spring hangers, etc., are hot riveted to the frame, doing away with the possibility of rattles and squeaks, and adding to the general strength. No other car selling for less than $3,000. uses this type of frame.

UNIVERSAL.
The universal joint is non-metallic. It is composed of thermoid fibre discs, eliminating the back lash that is characteristic of metallic joints. Lubrication is entirely unnecessary.

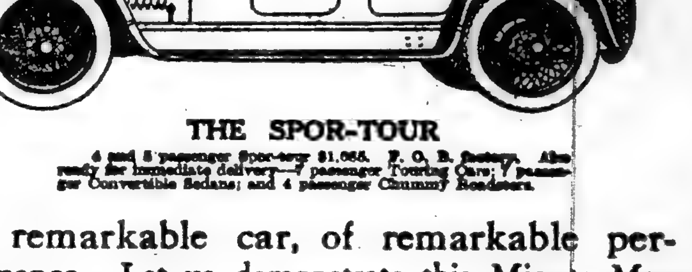
LUBRICATION.
The Minute-Man has only four oil cups and three grease cups, all easily accessible. Elsewhere it is equipped with greaseless bushings, used in no other cars selling for less than $5,000.

CONTROL.
The Lexington is exceedingly light and simple of control. It steers by the pressure of a finger against the steering wheel. The clutch can be disengaged with the pressure of the thumb. The emergency brake locks the rear wheels if applied with the little finger.

SERVICE.
The Lexington service station, located conveniently at 411 West 58th Street where a complete assortment of parts is carried at all times, is adequate for every requirement of our customers. We gladly refer you to any Lexington owner for information concerning our liberal service policy and the broad scope of our guarantee.

We foresaw the present shortage of good motor cars months ago and took adequate steps then to protect your interests as well as our own.

Consequently we are in a position to give you your car NOW—when you want it. Immediate delivery is what you are entitled to—and that's what you will have.



THE SPOR-TOUR
4 and 5 passenger Spor-tour $1,665. F. O. B. factory. Also ready for immediate delivery—7 passenger Touring Cars; 7 passenger Convertible Sedans; and 4 passenger Chummy Roadsters.

COLLECT THOUSANDS IN INSURANCE FRAUD

New Jersey Ring of Adjusters Certified to Losses Where There Had Been No Fire.

FIVE UNDER INDICTMENT

Others Under Surveillance and Soon to be Arrested—Four "Fires" in One House.

Following recent conferences between representatives of the National Board of Fire Underwriters and the police and prosecuting officers of Newark and other places in Northern New Jersey, announcement was made yesterday at the offices of the National Board, 76 William Street, this city, that steps were being taken to end an extraordinary series of insurance frauds in which a prominent adjuster and others were implicated.

According to the officials of the underwriters' board, no more extraordinary series of "incendiary" activities has ever been exposed than that which has just been unearthed by Lieutenant George A. Stadiman and Sergeant Fred Rath of the Newark Detective Bureau in connection with the Committee on Incendiarism and Arson of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

More than twenty "fires" have thus far been investigated, and alleged insurance frauds covering thousands of dollars disclosed. Fire insurance investigators, however, said yesterday that the operations of this ring included not less than one hundred cases in Newark alone, and many others in Northern New Jersey.

A number of arrests have been made and some of the conspirators have confessed to their part in the transactions. One of the five indicted in Essex County is among the most prominent adjusters in the East, George W. Comstock, manager of the New Jersey Adjustment Bureau. William A. Baird, an adjuster in the employ of that organization, has also been indicted.

In addition to these adjusters, Barney Green, an insurance broker, and Harry Harris, alias Henry Hershon, and Louis Diamond, alias A. J. Gruber, insurance solicitors, are under indictment. Still others, it was said, are under suspicion and surveillance.

One of the remarkable things about these cases is that for the most part they did not include incendiarism. The actual use of fire appeared in very few instances, although the many thousands of dollars collected from the insurance companies were all upon the basis of alleged fire losses. In some cases, men in this ring, by the mere subterfuge of changing a name, are said to have cashed in upon five or six "fires" where investigation now proves no fires to have occurred.

A statement issued yesterday by the National Board said:

"In a typical case $500 was collected upon 'water and breakage damage,' thus implying a considerable degree of noise and confusion at the very least, and yet tenants living upon the same floor and across the hall had no knowledge of any fire. In fact, this same thing is alleged to have happened three or four times at the same address, but under different names. One characteristic of these 'fires' is that in not one case was an alarm sent to the Fire Department. In a few instances, however, a slight precaution seems to have been taken by way of camouflage, in the contingency that some other adjuster might appear who was not a party to the scheme.

"Such precautions consisted in scorching the walls and several articles on the premises with torch, or by means of a burning newspaper. Another plan was that of having a few pieces of burned clothing and other articles which could be taken to any desired spot just prior to the visit of an adjuster. However, such cases were exceptions, since the adjuster himself is alleged to have been a party to the whole activity.

"The modus operandi was about as follows: The broker would obtain a policy of insurance for the assured under a fraudulent name, and an adjuster for the company would adjust the loss. Everything thus appearing to be regular, the 'proofs' would be sent to the company, and the payment go through in the usual way. It seems to have been the theory that by sticking to a uniform average of about $500 and avoiding the attention of the fire departments no suspicion would be aroused.

"However, suspicion did attach itself to several of those most actively concerned, and by dint of careful investigation, the names of a number of others believed to be implicated, were secured. Some of the suspected men fled from the city, but were brought back to justice. All of these have not yet been apprehended, but probably will be in the near future. They are now under close surveillance."

Evidence in the possession of the Newark police and the National Board, showed that some of the men confessed that they were obliged to pay $250 in advance to the adjuster upon a $500 fire, thus indicating that they worked on a fifty-fifty basis. Not always was the assured a party to the conspiracy to defraud. It is alleged that in some cases, following a small loss in actual fire, the assured was paid a small sum of money in cash and proofs were made for larger times than the amount. In one case, the assured was paid $40 in cash and proofs were made for $400. It is understood that a large number of fire insurance companies fell victims to the New Jersey ring.

TELL WHY CITY MUST PAY FOR TUBE LINK

Service Board Members Say Fund to Pay for Connection Has Been Absorbed.

$300,000 IS AMOUNT NEEDED

Asserts Delay by Board of Estimate Will Cause Postponement of Date Set, June 15.

The Public Service Commission adopted a resolution yesterday asking the Board of Estimate to rescind its approval with the Interborough Rapid Transit Company of Aug. 6, providing that the company should pay for the work of connecting the old and new subways, and to approve a modified agreement providing that the cost should be paid by the city. With the resolution the commission gave out a long letter explaining the reasons why the burden should be shifted to the city.

The amount involved is $300,000 and the work to be done is the completion by the Interborough Company of the connections between the subways at Times Square and at Borough Hall and Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn. It was first agreed that the money should be provided by the Interborough Company out of a fund of $58,000,000 which it had agreed to contribute toward the cost of the city-owned lines, but practically all of this contribution has been absorbed.

No attention was paid by the commission to the report of the Committee on Finance and Budget of the Board of Estimate, which accused the commission of not hurrying the completion of the subway work because of its friendship for the Interborough Company, which was reaping an alleged wrongful profit of $200,000 a month from the public because of the delay.

In its letter to the Board of Estimate the commission says in reference to the change of the $300,000 burden from the Interborough to the city:

"The agreement approved by the board on Oct. 5, 1917, provided that the Interborough Company should complete these connections and pay for the work out of its contribution under Contract 3. The agreement transmitted to your board on Feb. 20, 1918, provided that the city should pay the cost of the work and charge it to the cost of construction under Contract 3. In both cases, however, the question as to whether a part of the work covering changes in equipment was part of the obligations of the Interborough Company to do as equipment under Contract 3 or a part of the obligation of the city to do as construction was reserved.

"The agreement approved by the board on Oct. 5, 1917, had been submitted to and approved by the Interborough Company before it was adopted by the commission and transmitted to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. After it had received the approval of the board it was sent to the Interborough Company for execution, but the Interborough Company refused to execute it on the ground that there was not sufficient money available from its contribution under Contract 3 in view of its obligations and commitments, to pay the cost of the work. The commission had of course no means of compelling the Interborough Company to execute it."

The commission has said that any delay made in appropriating this money would delay the operation of the Seventh Avenue and Lexington Avenue Subways until after June 15. There has been much delay since then, but the commission has still hopes to have these two trunk lines in operation on this date.

SALESMEN
often make the mistake of remaining too long in positions where they have little chance to show initiative and personal results.

A year ago a young man left one of the big bond houses to join our sales staff. He had been five years out of Yale, and was earning $150 per month. There was nothing in sight for him except his daily round of routine calls and correspondence, with a small promotion from time to time.

In his second month in our organization he earned commissions amounting to $205; in his third month, $358; in his fourth month, $498. In his fifth month his former chief offered him the general management of a trading company then being reorganized, but he preferred to continue with us. He has just been given a district managership in our company.

This man's experience might be yours. He has gone ahead rapidly in the last few months, not because of any remarkable talents, but because he has found the field of work in which his brains, education, and energy count to the utmost. He is in a new and growing line of business, where there is a corresponding opportunity to get results—and get them quickly.

Our work consists of conducting modern methods of advanced business training for executives, department heads, salesmen, correspondents, clerks, and others in progressive concerns. The company is not an old one, but has already achieved results which speak volumes for the possibilities of the near future.

The sales organization is made up of men of education and experience. They must be men of strong, clean, likable personality; they must know how to meet and convince executives; they must be good "closers," not merely good talkers; they must have faith in themselves, and must be dissatisfied with incomes of less than $4,000 a year.

We can take on a few such men at once. Write us fully, outlining your training and experience; in return we shall gladly give you full details, and if it proves mutually desirable, we shall arrange for an interview. All correspondence will be held absolutely confidential.

Please apply by letter only, addressing

A PARTNER FOR SIX WEEKS.

A business executive, entering on new duties six weeks from now, wants to occupy that time. He is a specialist in extending sales and reducing sales expense. He earns upwards of twenty thousand yearly for himself, and vastly more for those with whom he works.

He has a thorough understanding of the economic situation which confronts all business, because of the huge Government war expenditures. He has just had an exceptional opportunity to learn the sub-surface financial conditions which few business men have visualized and which will determine the prosperity or adversity of most corporations for the next several years.

It is possible that in six weeks he can suggest policies which may save a business or double a business. Few sales departments can fail to be benefited, invigorated, and permanently strengthened by his working with the sales manager like a brother for that time.

The City Man who gained a Country Home and lost nothing
* * took a seven-room apartment at Kew Gardens.
There were all forms of country pleasures at his very door. With the extra daylight saving hour to devote to them.
His apartment covered an entire separate wing—the full privacy of a country house.
Its living, sleeping and servants' quarters were entirely shut off from each other—yet compact and on one floor.
It had large, all outside rooms; 3 tiled baths; all night hall and elevator service; every high-class feature; the finest of construction and finish; select, desirable neighbors.
It was in a beautiful four-story building, surrounded by fine old trees and parked grounds; his children played around, healthy, protected, and contented.
It was 16 minutes from the heart of Manhattan—pleasant, uncrowded travel.

FIFTEEN MINUTES FROM PENN. STATION

Dignified in their substantial combination of rich, dark brick and stucco, three new detached houses of eight rooms and three baths have been completed for sale. Located on a quiet residential street, they have an unusual charm of appearance which makes them notable even in the Gardens. On account of the shortage of housing facilities rents have increased and will continue to rise. Any thoughtful person will realize that it is cheaper now to own a home that can be purchased on a small cash investment, paying the balance as rent. The supply of new houses is limited and the future cost of building will be excessive.

The environment is pleasanter than in Manhattan.
The floor space is cheaper than living in Manhattan.
The accessibility to the business, shopping and theatre districts is equal to living in Manhattan.
The frequency of electric trains, with a running schedule of fifteen minutes, discourages the idea of commuting.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS IN THE REAL ESTATE WORLD

REVIEW OF REAL ESTATE MARKET

Deals for Grand Central Palace and Site for Hotel Commonwealth.

COMMENT AND OPINION

Aldermen May Investigate Alleged Profiteering—The Title Company and the Law.

Two large deals were conspicuous in the business of the week, which, otherwise, continued to concern itself with moderate-priced properties, bought and sold principally by operators. The sale of the Grand Central Palace to an organization in which Alfred I. du Pont is interested and the announcement by the Commonwealth Hotel Construction Company that it had selected a site near Times Square for its new structure were the two principal transactions closed.

The Grand Central Palace will, as the result of the change in ownership, be utilized as a permanent exhibition building for foreign commodities of all kinds where they will be viewed and purchased by domestic buyers. Although the transaction had more of a commercial than a real estate interest, the prominence of the property, its value, and the high standing of the buyers, places it among the principal realty deals of the year.

The location selected by the Hotel Commonwealth interests comprises the entire block bounded by Broadway and Seventh Avenue, Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Streets. Stock is still being sold under the co-operative plan through which the project is being financed and no actual construction will be started until an additional $2,500,000 has been raised.

After Profiteering Landlords.

Since the action at Washington, where the Senate passed an anti-rent profiteering bill directed at landlords in the District of Columbia, the possible effects of this move on the governing bodies of large cities where similar practices are being charged has been awaited with considerable interest by both tenants and property owners.

Although the jurisdiction of city governing agencies with respect to regulating the prices of any commodity, including rent, has not been clearly defined (opinion holding that such powers came only within Federal or State scope) the resolution introduced in the Board of Aldermen may bring the rent profiteering issue in New York City directly before the public in a very short time.

The resolution introduced by Alderman Robert L. Moran, which was referred to the Committee on Rules, reads as follows:

"Whereas, Statements and complaints are being made to the effect that the rents of apartments and flats in this city are being unduly increased with a resulting hardship, in many cases to an already overburdened citizenship; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Board of Aldermen hereby requests every member of this body to inquire into these conditions in his respective district, and also calls upon the citizens of the city to communicate any information they may have concerning rent profiteering to the Alderman of their district, to the end that this board may be in a position to determine the necessity of an official investigation by the Board of Aldermen into this important subject."

There have been increases in rent within recent months in practically all parts of the city, to offset the jump in the tax rate and the large increases in the cost of coal, labor, and in other items which enter into the management and maintenance of properties. Whether any landlord in New York City has actually been capitalizing the existing shortage in rents by unjustifiable increases has not been made known. If he has, the efforts of the Aldermen in their respective districts, to cast upon him the glare of "pitiless publicity" will be watched with eagerness by everyone identified with the real estate business.

Title Companies May Not Practice Law.

In the recent case of People v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., (180 App. Div. 648) decided in the Appellate Division, Second Department, it appeared that on Nov. 29, 1915, one Louis Singer, on the direction of a detective employed by a committee of the Brooklyn Bar Association, visited the company's office with one Pascal, introduced himself as Bishop, and at their request a bill of sale of articles of personal property and a chattel mortgage thereon was prepared by the company's employes for which he paid $6, receiving a receipt. There was also introduced in evidence a pamphlet taken from a desk in the company's office which contained a schedule of charges for drawing legal documents, most of them relating to real property, but including bills of sale. It was also shown that on Dec. 6, 1915, a power of attorney, release, and receipt were prepared by the company's employe, for which there was a charge of $4 and $3 respectively. It was held that there had been a violation of section 280 of the Penal Law, which forbids a corporation or voluntary association to practice law.

It was urged by the company that practicing law involves only such acts and services as attorneys are authorized to perform by virtue of their office and that this embraces only appearing in court and representing clients in actions. But the Court said that this view of the prohibition of the statute is too limited. The relation of attorney and client, involving as it does the highest trust and confidence, cannot exist between an attorney employed by a corporation to practice law for it and a client of the corporation, for such attorney would be subject to the direction of the corporation and not to the direction of the client. The voice is that an employe of a corporation serving for pay owes his duty to the corporation. As he cannot serve two masters, so he cannot serve both the client and the corporation employer.

This reason applies, not only to services of attorney and counsel in the matter of litigation, but to other services which are usually performed by lawyers, which involve professional trust and confidence, knowledge of the law and skill, born of experience, in its application. The practice of the law as the term is now commonly understood embraces much more than the conduct of litigation. The greater, more responsible and delicate part of a lawyer's work is in other directions. Drafting instruments creating trusts, formulating contracts, drawing wills, and negotiations all require legal knowledge and power of adaption of the highest order. Beside these employments, mere skill in trying lawsuits where ready wit and natural resources often prevail against profound knowledge of the law is a relatively unimportant part of a lawyer's work.

Similar Action in Brooklyn.

According to a decision rendered two weeks ago by Police Magistrate McGuire in Brooklyn any incorporated real estate agency, or title insurance or mortgage company, or any other kind of corporation that has drawn a contract or lease or mortgage deed, or other document required in the transfer, incumbering or letting of property, real or personal, has violated Section 280 of the Penal Law, and is liable to fine and imprisonment.

The decision was rendered in a proceeding brought in the name of the People of the City of New York against the Title Guarantee and Trust Company in the Magistrates' Court of Brooklyn in February, wherein it is charged by Charles L. Bowen, a member of the Bar Association of Brooklyn, that on Jan. 24 the title company aforesaid "rendered and furnished legal advices and advice to deponent and to one Vincent L. Todaro, and furnished attorneys and counsel and rendered legal services and assumed to be entitled to practice law in violation of the statute in such cases." The title company has been held for trial at Special Sessions.

DEMAND AT ROCKAWAY.

Early Season Raises Rentals and Stimulates Buying.

Rockaway coast property owners are experiencing one of the best renting seasons in the history of Queens Borough real estate. Months before the occupancy of shorefront houses was possible the demand began to manifest itself through a steady stream of prospective lessees seeking to inspect properties. Although the season usually begins about Decoration Day, many Summer residents have been in possession since May 1.

As a consequence of the intensified demand, rentals have increased in some instances as much as 100 per cent. as compared with income demand from the same parcels last year, and property owners are more optimistic than they have been in years.

More than 1,000 bungalows have been constructed in the past few years between Arverne and Edgemere, the original rental prices of which ranged from $200 to $250 each, and which have advanced in rental figures as high as $500, with no vacancies since the early part of April, according to local brokers.

Edgemere cottages have advanced in average over 30 per cent., and the section is completely rented. The Far Rockaway section has also been extremely active, with very few houses remaining to be had. The Arverne section is comparatively fully rented, especially in the Somerville Park section, and within the last few months a shipbuilding plant has been established, where more than 600 men are employed in the construction of light-draft boats. Several other sections of the Jamaica Bay front have already been surveyed for the same purpose.

Lewis H. May, who has been active in the selling and renting of Rockaway coast properties for a number of years, discussed the real estate situation in that section of the borough yesterday, and outlined the principal factors which have contributed to the creation of the present excellent season.

"With the advance in real estate rents, the selling market has been buoyed up and is on a very firm basis," he said. "Recent sales have been made on a 10 per cent. rental basis, which have shown to the owners a substantial profit. More than 150 lots have been sold by the S. & L. Construction Company in the bungalow section in the last six weeks at an average price of $1,200, each lot measuring 20 by 100. The general lack of material and labor has restricted the construction of larger homes and has opened a sale market, which looks forward to produce considerable activity during the Summer months. A number of deals are under negotiation involving moderate-priced houses along the coast both for investment and speculation.

"The many suggested improvements for the Rockaway coast by the city and State are ready for immediate action. A recent bill, signed by the Governor, ceding to the city oceanfront rights, is the first stepping-stone to its most needed asset, a boardwalk. This, in the opinion of local operators, is not far distant, due to the fact that the city intends protecting its taxable property along the ocean, and by so doing will have to reclaim the outer beach, construct jetties and sea walls, which sea walls ultimately will develop into a boardwalk esplanade more than seven miles in length.

"At the final hearing on the Cross Bay Drive, it was approved by the Board of Estimate, and steps are now being taken for its completion. This drive will run parallel with the Long Island Railroad across Jamaica Bay and will connect the Rockaway coast with the heart of New York, reducing the distance to fourteen miles by motor. The Rockaway Turnpike, now under construction, running through Nassau and Queens Counties, will cut off more than seven miles by direct route from Jamaica to Far Rockaway.

"These many improvements are now past the point of suggestion and are in tangible shape. They are the direct and indirect causes for the present high rental returns and have helped to solidify the backbone of the Fifth Ward of Queens, comprising Far Rockaway, Edgemere, Arverne, Rockaway Beach, Rockaway Park, Belle Harbor, and Neponsit.

"Among the new residents in this section are many from the Jersey coast and mountain section and others who have in mind the seashore advantages, the cool temperature, nearness to New York, transportation, and motor parkways.

"The larger hotels and boarding houses report an exceptional renting season, several of the larger hotels having no vacancies to offer for the entire season.

"Due to the lack of housing facilities in this section and the impossibility of securing labor and material for new construction, rental values are bound to hold firm and increase under the acknowledged laws of supply and demand.

"It is fair to assume that many old-time Summer residents of the Rockaways, who have not as yet located, will have to migrate to other suburbs on account of the early consumption of properties in the Rockaways by the influx of new residents."

Removal of Trade Waste.

The old question of the removal of ashes and trade waste by the city has been revived by the complaint of a property owner in reply to which the city has stated that it will not assume this expense except from dwellings. The Board of Estimate and Apportionment has repeatedly refused to make any appropriation for such removal from business buildings, notwithstanding that the Legislature two years ago passed a bill permitting the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to authorize the Street Cleaning Department to remove business as well as domestic waste, but to enact a charge for that service.

Although this permission has been given it has never been availed of for the reason that an appropriation of several million dollars for the equipment of the Street Cleaning Department would have been required and the city's financial stringency was such as not to make it desirable to incur this outlay.

The Growing Housing Problem.

Some statistician has compiled figures which show that in New York City every day 2,057 passenger trains arrive, every minute 260 visitors arrive, every day 350 new citizens come to New York to live, every forty-two seconds in normal times an immigrant lands.

These figures may not be absolutely accurate, but one thing is certain: New and ever-increasing demands will be made upon this city and its environs for homes, apartments, offices, salesrooms, and factories. The total amount of real estate cannot be increased—one lot cannot be made into five.

NEW PLAN FOR HOUSING EMPLOYES OF JERSEY MEADOWS SHIPYARDS

Chamber of Commerce Suggests a New Rapid Transit Connection Between the Borough of Queens and New Jersey Through the Pennsylvania and Long Island Tunnels.

By WALTER I. WILLIS,
Secretary the Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens.

"Ships, more ships—and still more ships," is the nation-wide demand in order that our troops, several million strong, may quickly reach the battle-line in France, and the line of communication be maintained so that the necessary ammunition, food, and equipment can be sent over in immense quantities. That is the most serious situation that confronts the United States today.

Ships, however, cannot be built without labor. Sufficient labor is undoubtedly available throughout the United States, but must be concentrated at the shipyards on the Atlantic seaboard. It is impossible to bring this great labor supply together unless it can be properly housed, for the mechanic, the carpenter, and the riveter who are earning good wages insist upon proper living accommodations for themselves and their families.

They are just as patriotic as the soldiers at the front, but see no reason why homes should not be provided that supply the proper conveniences of life, for they do not care to live in hastily constructed shacks without proper sanitary facilities and the other comforts that make a home.

The chief factors that have resulted in the delay in the construction of ships have been the labor shortage and the large labor "turnover." Both of these difficulties are in a large part due to the inability to provide satisfactory housing. The inaccessible location of shipyards in relation to residential centres has made matters worse. Skilled and unskilled labor, desirous of working in shipbuilding plants, found the difficulties of travel so great and housing facilities for their families so inadequate that they sought work elsewhere.

This housing problem must be solved for the shipyards in New York Harbor, or else it will be impossible to secure sufficient labor to construct the ships that are now under contract in the Staten Island and Newark Bay shipyards.

It is imperative that the commercial organizations of the metropolitan area of New York and New Jersey bring about a complete unity of action to speed up the shipbuilding program. The subject is vital and requires the sacrifice of profit, comfort, and convenience of individuals as well as manufacturing establishments whenever necessary.

Congress has made available for the U. S. Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation an appropriation of $50,000,000 for emergency housing for the employes of shipyards. It has also made available through the Secretary of Labor an appropriation of $60,000,000 to provide housing accommodations for the employes of industrial plants engaged in war work.

It is understood, however, that the Emergency Fleet Corporation, although proceeding rapidly with plans for the construction of homes for employes of shipbuilding plants at other points on the Atlantic seaboard, does not contemplate the construction of houses for the employes in the Newark Bay shipyards. It proposes, it is stated, by improving transportation facilities between New York City and the shipyards, to tap the labor market of Manhattan, Brooklyn, Bronx, and Queens, and thus recruit a labor force from the thousands now employed in New York City.

The announcement has been made that the Hudson and Manhattan tubes from Sixth Avenue and Thirty-third Street, and also Cortlandt Street, Manhattan, are to be extended in New Jersey to reach these shipbuilding plants, as part of the plan of improving transportation facilities, in order to tap the labor market of New York.

Manufacturers and other employers of labor in New York City are willing to make every sacrifice necessary for the welfare of the nation and to speed up the shipbuilding program, but cannot understand this attitude on the part of the Government to take away labor which is now engaged to a large extent in the production of war materials in thousands of factories in Manhattan, Brooklyn, and Queens, when a plentiful supply of labor can be brought from all over the United States to work in the shipbuilding plants if additional housing facilities are provided in New York City to accommodate them.

Investigations made by the leading commercial organizations in New York City to determine whether there actually existed vacant houses or apartments that could be used for housing these employes have proved that no such facilities exist. Only 165 vacant housings in accessible parts of the city were found.

If it is the intention of the Government to deplete the labor market of New York City to build up the labor supply for the shipbuilding plants in the Newark Meadows, and thus hamper production on other important war contracts, it cannot fail to result in a competition for labor that will send wage schedules soaring and compel the Government in turn to pay more for labor than would have been required had an additional supply been brought from other parts of the country and housed in the different parts of New York City. In short, to cripple other war industries to expedite shipbuilding is not the correct solution of the problem.

This subject has been given considerable study by the Manufacturing and Industrial Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens, not only in connection with the housing of the thousands of additional employes engaged in war work in the manufacturing plants in Queens Borough, but also the employes of war industries in other boroughs.

One new concern alone in Long Island City employs over 5,000 men and women in the production of gas masks. These employes have been recruited within the last four months and have taxed the housing facilities of Queens Borough to the utmost. There are in addition 150 concerns in Queens Borough engaged in manufacturing war supplies.

The Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens is calling to the attention of William G. McAdoo, Director General of the Railroads; Charles M. Schwab, President of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and Otto C. Eidlitz, Chairman of the Committee on Housing of the Council of National Defense, a plan for housing employes of the shipyards at Newark Bay.

This plan proposes, in addition to the contemplated extension of the Hudson tubes, the operation of special electric train service from the Newark shipyards over the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks into the Pennsylvania Station, Manhattan, and thence through the Long Island Railroad tunnels into the Borough of Queens to the Woodside station, (which is the first stop,) where connections can be made with lines radiating to Flushing, Jamaica, and other parts of the borough.

The plan proposes further that the United States Government, through the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Department of Labor, utilize a large portion of the appropriations available for housing in the erection of homes in this section of New York City for the workingmen, not only of the shipyards on the Newark Meadows, but employes of industrial plants throughout the city who are engaged in war work.

At first glance this might seem to be a rather far-fetched plan. The arguments advanced by the Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens in behalf of its plan are that it offers the great advantages of (a) saving in time, (b,) no greater distance of travel, (c,) through the Government control of railroads a low rate of commutation could be ordered without legal complications, and (d) the permanence of the buildings erected and their absorption by the normal growth after the war.

In regard to the last argument, housings built in this territory of Queens Borough, which is now served by rapid-transit lines of the Dual Subway System, giving a 5-cent fare to all parts of New York City, can more readily be absorbed after the war by the normal growth than homes built in communities without such excellent rapid-transit facilities.

From the standpoint of distance, Woodside is nearer to the Newark shipyards than all of the Bronx and the largest part of Brooklyn. The distance is only twelve miles—five miles from Woodside to the Pennsylvania Station, and seven miles from the Pennsylvania Station to Manhattan Transfer. This is a shorter distance than hundreds of thousands of residents of New York travel daily from their homes to their places of business. It is the same distance as between the Battery and Spuyten Duyvil. The only difference is that people who have been accustomed to traveling many miles north and south each day on the elevated and subway lines will change their direction of travel to east and west.

From the standpoint of time, it would take approximately a half hour's ride, which is much less than the majority of the commuters, as well as subway riders, take each day to travel from their homes to their offices and workshops. The running time from Woodside to Pennsylvania Station is nine minutes, and from the Pennsylvania Station to Manhattan Transfer is sixteen minutes, or a total of twenty-five minutes. Allowing for a stop at Pennsylvania Station, to take on employes living in Manhattan, and for the time between Manhattan Transfer and the different shipyards, the total time of travel should not exceed from thirty-five to forty minutes. It takes a subway passenger more than fifty minutes to go from Park Row to the last station in the Bronx or Manhattan.

The United States Government, controlling all the railroads, can issue an order for the establishment of such special train service over the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks and Long Island Railroad tracks, and the tracks of any other railroad in the Newark Meadows.

From Manhattan Transfer these trains could be sent to any part of the Meadows served by the railroad tracks. A short connection, about one-half mile in length, could be built without delay to give direct service into the Newark Bay shipyards and connect with the proposed trolley line that will reach to the Port Newark terminal, as shown on the accompanying map.

The question of fare is one that could also be settled by the United States Government. A low commutation rate for only those employed in the shipyards and allied industries could be established by the Government and would make this an attractive transportation line.

The biggest advantage claimed for this plan of constructing houses in Queens Borough for the employes of shipyards in New Jersey and war industries throughout New York City is the permanence of buildings thus constructed and their ready absorption by the normal growth after the war. Such buildings would not be subject to the depreciation in values which would certainly result in other sections should the shipbuilding plants close entirely or materially reduce their working forces.

The normal growth of New York City requires that housing facilities be provided for at least 37,000 families each year, while the normal growth of Newark requires provision for 1,800 families; Bayonne, 400; Jersey City and Hoboken, 500 each. It can readily be seen that should these housings in Queens Borough be vacated by the employes of shipbuilding plants or other war industries they would be quickly absorbed by the normal growth of New York City.

CHAIRMAN OF MAYOR'S COMMITTEE DIAGNOSES REALTY ILLS

Nathan Hirsch, Chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Taxation, delivered an address recently before the members of the Real Estate Owners' Association of the Twelfth and Nineteenth Wards in which he urged property owners to retain their optimism and faith in real estate. After outlining the causes responsible for the present depression in the market, he outlined the aims of his committee and predicted that this year would mark the beginning of a new era for real estate owners.

Anticipates Real Estate Revival.

He said in part:

"I maintain that things are shaping themselves, quietly but intensively, toward the ultimate revival in real estate and all which that means to you and to every citizen in New York City.

"Before I go into a detailed discussion regarding the foundations for this belief, and before I outline to you the aims and aspirations of the Mayor's Committee on Taxation and the Investigation of Mortgage Loans, I want to sketch briefly a history of the events which lead up to the present condition of the real estate market, and which have been largely responsible for its prostration.

"It is only by diagnosing an ailment that we can effect its cure. It is by becoming familiar with real estate ills that we can apply the necessary remedies.

"The present real estate depression is not a recent development, but has been with us for more than ten years. The abuses which have been permitted to grow up and thrive to the detriment of real estate ownership have, through years of fostering, become so deep-seated and ingrained that their elimination is no easy task. The ailment has become almost chronic.

"Their elimination cannot be effected by a few public hearings, by writing letters to city or State officials, or by the cries of calamity howlers.

"Three great deterrents have been operating to discourage new capital from coming into the real estate market. They are over-taxation, over-assessment, and over-regulation.

"The Mayor's Committee is concerned only with the first two, the question of over-regulation not being included in the scope of its work, and being worthy of the attention of a separate committee.

Taxation and Assessment.

"Against the great web of taxation and assessment iniquities which have been leveled against New York City real estate our initial efforts have been directed, because the other great tragedy menacing real estate ownership—namely, the calling of loans—is directly traceable to their sinister influence.

"The tax rate has been steadily increasing until it has reached a new height, 2.36. Unwarranted municipal extravagance, huge commitments not altogether called for and not properly applied, and the unnecessary assumption by the city of new obligations toward its citizens have all combined toward advancing the tax rate because these added charges were immediately saddled upon real estate.

"The inequitable assessments placed upon city properties which have made the assessed valuations of New York real estate more or less of a joke are other developments that have become part of the system of real estate discrimination which has almost become a fixture in our scheme of municipal government.

"It is not surprising as time went on and these deterrents continued to develop that both property owners and lenders began to become somewhat discouraged. There was always the competition of other kinds of investments that involved less bother and was less interesting to the tax collector.

Effect on Mortgage Situation.

"Ever since the real estate market collapsed in 1907 the money market as regards mortgages has not really been easy. Conditions became even more aggravated every time the tax rate went up, every time new obnoxious real estate laws were passed, every time a parcel of real estate was sold at auction for less than the incumbrances.

"It is not surprising, therefore, that lenders became cautious, although if they had been far-sighted enough in the first place they would have realized that it was their own extreme caution which was tending to make matters worse.

"You are all familiar with the present situation. The tax rate has jumped 30 points, the cost of operating and maintaining property has gone up all the way from 50 to 100 per cent., mortgage money is unusually difficult to obtain, every item entering into management has advanced in cost. When, in the face of these undeniable factors in the situation, owners suggest that rents go up, so that the burden be shared by the tenants, the cry of profiteering is raised, and the landlord, who pays 95 per cent. of the cost of city government and 75 per cent. of the cost of the State government, is held up to public scorn and ridicule.

Committee Appointed.

"This is the situation which confronted the Mayor's Committee when it was appointed last February. The Mayor instructed us to inquire into the cause of the inequitable distribution of the tax burden and especially to see to it that justice was meted out to the small property owner who represents probably the best element in our community.

"The Committee, after a preliminary study of the situation along the lines that I have outlined to you, decided to approach the problem from three angles, first, the ascertaining of new sources of revenue in an effort to keep down the tax rate—second, to aid wherever possible in clarifying the mortgage situation and preventing undue and unwarranted calling of loans, and third, attempt to equalize assessed valuations and make the value placed upon real estate by the city a standard value.

"The committee has been at work for two months. It consists of business men with large and varied interests, who have made real sacrifices to engage in the fulfilment of their duties.

"It is not an easy matter to solve problems of such tremendous weight, and of such intricate character on such short notice, and we have not in the two months we have been at work accomplished the impossible or brought about a real estate millennium.

"For that matter, we began entirely too late to hope for any great measures of relief during the present session of the State Legislature. Our efforts have been directed toward research, and I am in a position to state that already we have become familiar enough with the illness to begin the application of the remedy.

Aim to Reduce Tax Rate.

"The first great reform which we hope to inaugurate is a reduction, and a permanent reduction, of the tax rate below the $2 mark, and eventually possibly to the $1.50 mark. It is a fact that never before has there been more attention given to this matter, and to the general subject of new sources of revenue in both the public press, in real estate councils, and in the State Legislature, than this year. This in itself is a good omen, because it means that it is becoming the focal centre of public opinion, a situation always capable of producing desirable results.

"Sentiment is beginning to crystallize in favor of another experiment with a personal tax. One of the chief tasks of this committee will be the drafting of a workable bill making possible a tax of this kind. We are not discouraged by the lamentable failure of the present Legislature to heed the cries of distress from New York, but we can expect no aid from that source as long as we have an unsympathetic State administration and an unsympathetic up-State majority in the Legislature.

For a Personal Tax.

"In my opinion, a personal property tax can be made workable if the tax levy is small and the return is made compulsory. It is my belief that the present year will witness the enactment of legislation of this character and that we shall be able to raise from this source alone enough money to effect a radical reduction in the tax rate. That is why I urged you to be hopeful.

"As far as preventing indiscriminate calling of loans is concerned, I am glad to say that we have also made considerable progress. Negotiations of this kind are naturally delicate, and especially so because in the great majority of cases the lender has legal justification to call for his money that I am constrained to dwell as briefly as possible on this subject. I am proud to say, however, that we have achieved perhaps our greatest deeds in a quiet way along this line.

Standardization of Values.

"The problem of standardizing assessed valuations involves a radical change in the entire scheme at present in vogue, and is fraught with great dangers because the city's borrowing capacity and very financial existence depends upon the present aggregate assessed valuation of its real estate. Radical reductions in assessments on certain properties are out of the question, without corresponding increases on other properties. This problem, however, is being studied by some of the best authorities which we have been able to interest in it; it is receiving special study on the part of a sub-committee composed of men who are eminently well qualified to do full justice to the subject, and I can assure you that the results will be gratifying to you all. The readjustment and revision of the assessment rolls of a city like New York is a gigantic task, but we face it bravely and with a confidence and hope which we ask you to share.

Mayor a Friend of Real Estate.

"In this connection I desire to convey to you the knowledge that Mayor Hylan is a friend to real estate. Moreover, his Committee on Taxation, which I represent, is his active expression of that cordial relationship and symbolizes his sincere desire to protect and conserve the city's greatest asset, its real estate.

"I want to leave one thought with you, and that is this: I am going to criticise the property owners of New York, myself included, because I have been as much to blame as most owners here.

"We have been too long unorganized and too long apathetic in matters affecting our mutual interests. If property interests were effectively organized ten years ago conditions would not, in my opinion, have reached their present deplorable state. We have been too self-centred. There has been no team-work. Our protests against discrimination have been ineffectual because they have been feebie. We have been quibbling and fighting over minor matters while the enemy has been overwhelming us on every side.

"Many of our so-called taxpayers' associations have never been more than social organizations. I might say that perhaps the most notable development within recent years has been the changed attitude of owners with regard to civic matters. Where they have organized, their power has been wielded with effective results, and the growing interest which they are manifesting in governmental affairs, the care with which they are studying pending legislation, and the unmistakable trend toward organization and co-operation all encourage and strengthen my belief already expressed to you, that things are shaping themselves for a happy readjustment."

$900,000 BRONX WAR HOSPITAL

Further evidence of how the United States Government is preparing to take care of the many thousands of young men called to service was shown a few days ago in Pelham Bay Park when scores of men started work on the erection of what is believed will be, when it is completed, the largest hospital of its kind in the State.

Plans and specifications for this new hospital, which will consist of a group of forty-eight buildings, were drawn by Henry Nordhan, architect. The hospital will cost $900,000 to erect.

According to the plans, the new hospital will contain more than 1,200 beds, which means that it will accommodate more patients than Fordham, Lincoln, Lebanon, St. Francis, and St. Joseph's Hospitals put together.

The structure will be equipped with the most modern scientific appointments, and will be able to cope with any emergency that may arise.

SUBWAY STATION STORES.

Unique Building in the Bronx That Will Be Self-Supporting.

Stores built in a railway station is one of the innovations of the Anderson Avenue station of the Interborough, now under construction at 162d Street and Anderson Avenue, in the Bronx.

This is the second station beyond 155th Street, on the Ninth Avenue Elevated Division, and will serve the population of part of Fordham Heights, which is well built up.

The station will consist of a two-story building, about seventy-five feet front and eighty feet deep; the large central portion being devoted to station purposes, on each side of which will be a good-sized store, capable of being divided into two smaller stores. The building will be fireproof throughout, with ornamental front in harmony with the neighboring buildings.

The upper floor, reached by stairs from a separate entrance on the street, but also connecting with the station, will be rented for high-class purposes, and is so laid out that it can be divided into quarters. Because of the position of the railway structure under the building, the ground floor will be placed slightly above the curb grade, but the architect has cleverly remedied any awkwardness from this by the use of short interior ramps.

Several offers for the stores are already under consideration, and both of them will probably be rented before the building is completed. Besides entrances from Anderson Avenue, both stores will have show windows and entrances on the station from inside the building for the convenience of passengers.

Discussing the probable rental value of the stores A. W. Warner of the Interborough Company said yesterday: "There is a vast difference in rental value between a store which adjoins a station entrance or exit and one which is even a door or two away. The abrupt way that store rental values drop with distance from a station and the tendency of both landlord and prospective tenant to underestimate this fact is surprising.

"At one station I had no difficulty in getting $150 per month rent for a store adjoining a station, while two doors away a store stood vacant at $50 per month.

"The reason for this condition is that a station store obtains the benefit of the accumulated buying desire of many persons during their ride uptown, which expresses itself at the passengers' first opportunity to purchase, even sometimes though they know they could do better by walking a block.

"Certain articles are known to be usually purchasable at a station or near it, such flowers, newspapers, tobacco, candy, and drugs, and the inclination is to wait and buy them there. Also there is the reaction from a desire to buy one thing that results in a desire to spend for other things which can be turned into especially good account by a station store.

"The land which is to be occupied by the Anderson Avenue station and stores was acquired by the Interborough for the purpose of securing a right of way where the tunnel comes through the hill out of the ground between Anderson and Jerome Avenues. A five-story apartment house stood on part of the site and it was lifted bodily and moved down the hill.

"In erecting the station building the added cost of the stores and upper floor will be negligible considering their rental value, and the income from these rented portions will go into the general receipts, in which the city shares; or to look at it in another way, the rents from the station stores will go quite a way toward making the station itself self-supporting."

Soldiers' and Sailors' Bill.

Under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief act which is now in force the dependents of a person in military service cannot be dispossessed from premises occupied chiefly for dwelling purposes unless the rent is over $50 per month or unless a court grants leave.

It is possible to have part of the pay of the said person in military service allotted toward the payment of rent. It is a misdemeanor to try and dispossess without calling attention to the dependency.

Besides soldiers and sailors are included civilian clerks, nurses, and everybody connected with any part of the military and naval forces of the United States.

A committee of the New York Building Managers' Association, after an examination of the act, has made the following report on the subject:

"Your committee believes that it would be highly improper and contrary to public policy for a landlord to terminate the tenancies of persons who have been tenants for considerable periods of time merely because they were likely to be or might possibly be called into military service.

"They do believe that within proper limits landlords should inquire into the prospective military status of intending new tenants, to the end that, so far as may be, the burden of carrying free or deferred rent apartments shall be equitably distributed.

"As the war progresses it is conceivable that many owners will be carrying large numbers of such apartments. Besides the usual apartment or private house dwellings, there are many private houses occupied by caretakers paying nominal rents. Superintendents residing in nonresidence properties, janitors and Superintendents paying nominal rents, and dwellers in old buildings awaiting sale, which are subject to the effects of the act."

Holland Building Plan.

The great scarcity of building materials in Holland has led the Government to take action toward organized effort to ameliorate conditions as far as possible. With that aim in view it is proposed to form a company to purchase all building materials for the common benefit, though more particularly materials for dwellings, of which there is now a scarcity throughout the country, reports Consul Frank W. Mahin, at Amsterdam.

In addition to buying, this company will also sell building materials and may finish or otherwise prepare them; in short, do practically everything that may be of public benefit in regard to building materials. The company will have the active assistance, by representation or otherwise, of the Government and of the authorities of Amsterdam and other cities. It is proposed to continue the work of this company during the existing abnormal conditions.

Brooklyn Dwelling Deals.

The Realty Associates report an increased demand for dwellings in Brooklyn, announcing that fifteen houses of this type have been sold within the last two months. Five recent sales affected properties at 488 Ninth Street, 1 Jefferson Avenue, 364 Sterling Place, 3 Jefferson Avenue, and 94 St. James Place.

SINN FEIN RECORD AS TO GERMANY

Documentary Facts, Not of British Origin, Assembled as Bearing on Irish Situation and Teutonic Ambitions

By CHARLES JOHNSTON.

At a meeting organized by Sinn Fein leaders, both Irish and Irish-American, in New York recently, the suggestion that there was an understanding between the Sinn Fein movement and Germany was denounced as an outrageous lie, and Americans were advised to seek information concerning the movement from sources wholly free of British influence and coloring. It is a fair challenge. Let us do exactly that, and see what we can learn about Sinn Fein.

Let us begin with a quotation or two from a source quite beyond British influence, namely, the Deutsche Rundschau, Band 168, published in Berlin, and covering the Spring months of 1916. The writer is Sir Roger Casement, at that time in Berlin, not as a solitary adventurer, but as Ambassador of the Irish Republic to the Court of Potsdam, so recognized by Sinn Fein leaders both in Ireland and in America, and then and later in close touch with the German Foreign Office.

On Page 322, Casement writes: "Few persons in Ireland and still fewer in Germany have thought of the possibility of a political union between the distant Atlantic island (Ireland) and the great Middle European Kaiserreich." * * * "Without Ireland there could and would be today no British Empire. This, the chief foundation of the British world power, on which the whole edifice rests, must be laid close to the heart of the German, if the German people is ever to play the great rôle in the destiny of mankind—outside Middle Europe—which it should claim as its right, in virtue of its many great qualities. That is Ireland's mission to Europe; that is the bond of union between Germany and Ireland * * *" (Page 323.) "If there had existed bonds of friendship and understanding between the German people and the Irish people before this war, then the arrogance (of England) would already have been diminished. * * * Today, the beginning of an understanding between Irishmen and Germans can be perceived. The foundations of a common policy, which will be prompted by a common hope, are already laid in America. * * *" (Pages 325-6.)

Casement was, therefore, working for "a political union" between Germany and Ireland. The copies of the Deutsche Rundschau are in New York; the quotations can easily be verified.

At the same time the German end of the arrangement was being taken care of by Teodor Schiemann, Professor of Berlin University, and therefore a servant of the German Government. In a tract called Die Achilles-ferse Englands, (England's Achilles' Heel,) Berlin, 1915, Schiemann writes: "In this war Ireland has only one enemy. Let every Irish heart and hand, each Irish penny, strike for Germany! American-Irish, hold yourselves in readiness!"

Both Casement and Schiemann, the Irishman and the German, point to Irish-Americans. Let us see what is to be learned by following their indication.

In December of that same year, 1915, there was completed in New York a book with the title "What Could Germany Do for Ireland?" The author is James K. McGuire, at one time Mayor of Syracuse, and apparently an American born. The publisher is the Wolfe Tone Company. The frontispiece represents Erin, as a fair colleen, under the shield of heroic Germania in a Pickelhaube. The introduction is by Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet of New York, who enthusiastically commends it: "At the request of my friend, the author, I have undertaken to aid his work. * * * He has fully accomplished his purpose. * * *"

Let us review the work of Dr. Emmet's friend. In his second chapter, the former Mayor of Syracuse writes: "Striking heavy blows at the heart of the British Empire in the East, while English statesmen tremble, the triumphant German organization is marching over the world's great trading route from Hamburg to Bagdad, from Berlin to Constantinople. The juncture effected of the German-Austrian forces with the Bulgarians eliminates Serbia and makes clear the road for the Turks on their march to Egypt. * * * The guns of von Mackensen boomed across the Danube and soon their reverberations will be heard over the Suez Canal and echo through India, the seats of British world power. * * *" (Page 29.)

"Germany," he continues, "must control Europe from the Baltic Sea to the Mediterranean Sea, from Riga to Constantinople. She must, if possible, and at any hazard, take over Egypt and the Suez Canal and aim to split up India, the cornerstone of the British Empire. * * * Germany will weaken the Russian autocratic empire, a constant menace to modern civilization and progress in its vast numbers, and take over Courland and leave Poland and her 13,000,000 of people to set up an autonomous and independent State under the protection of Austro-Germany—a buffer State between the Teuton and Slav Empires, always ways of infinite advantage to the future of the Teutonic forces.

"Having thus insured her position of supremacy in the East, the terms of peace should furnish her with the only guarantee of paramountcy in the West, which depends on the complete separation of Ireland from England, and the creation of a new Irish National Government formed to develop the resources of the island and assured of an alliance with Germany. * * * A strong Irish nation, resolute in national spirit and character, is essential to Germany in successfully terminating the war. * * *" (Pages 43-45.)

So far, Dr. Emmet's friend is in perfect accord with Schiemann and Casement. He is well posted, in advance, of the German plans. A few pages further on he gives us the key to what has been, I fancy, a mystery to many Americans: exactly why "Nationalist" Irishmen deem themselves a peculiar people, exempt from taking part in the world's great struggle between good and evil. The answer appears to be this:

"With the British casualty list running into thousands daily and the most terrific battles yet to come, the wise friends of Irish nationality at home and abroad see in this fearful casualty rate the vital necessity of saving Ireland for her future greatness among the nations of the earth. Her youth preserved and the young men and wealth of England gone, there will be left a virile people better able, through the exhaustion of England, to cope with their enemies in art, business, and industries. If the Teutonic victories shall recast the map of Europe, as now seems inevitable, and Ireland succeeds in taking a place once more among the nations, then it is vital to her national welfare that her young men avoid enrolling in the British Army. They should remain at home preparing to build up a strong and free Ireland, resisting conscription to the bitter end. These views are upheld by practically all of the Irish-American societies and newspapers. And those who have been prejudiced against Germany by a studied campaign of false news and slanderous reports might well be reminded of the powerful situation of the Germanic forces in the enemy's territory, (i. e., in France and Belgium,) and to court the friendship rather than the hostility of the strongest nation in Europe." (Page 49.)

Meanwhile, it would appear that the Irish representative in Germany had been sending good accounts of his work, for we read (Page 70) that "Our friends at Berlin are giving serious consideration to the plan of assisting in the liberation of Ireland, thus insuring her future on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean, and the guarantees of her friendship have been given to the representatives (now in Germany) of Ireland as a nation." (Page 70.)

This is not quite clear; but the meaning appears to be that Germany is insuring her own future in America by promising help to Ireland; the implication being that Irish-Americans will help Germany to procure power in the United States.

Mr. McGuire paints rosy pictures of what will happen "with Germany as an ally of Ireland. * * *" (Page 78.) I cannot do justice to these, nor follow his exuberant joy over all things German, as, for instance, the statement that "the unparalleled success of the German loan was cheered at many gatherings of the so-called 'hyphenated' pro-German Irish-Americans." (Page 252.) I have space only for one short but significant passage: "What earthly practical interest have the Irish in saving Belgium or Serbia when they cannot save themselves and put Ireland on the map of small nations? Are they (Irishmen) still so blind as not to recognize the death of both Belgium and Serbia, whatever the outcome of the war? * * * The remnants of the Celtic race should be as much concerned over the fate of Greece at the hands of England, and of Persia under Russia, as to worry over the state of Belgium or Serbia." (Pages 307-308.)

Let us now turn to Ireland. In an issue of Sinn Fein, Arthur Griffith, its founder, writes that Bryce's policy of conciliation here "was beaten—hopelessly beaten—by an anti-Anglo-American alliance entente between the Germans and Irish-Americans. That is the sole reason why the United States has escaped being dragged into this war. * * * If to defend the remnant of Irish manhood from being hurried to destruction in this war, planned by England, provoked by England, and intended to serve only England; and if to vindicate from the monstrous calumnies that Ireland's calumniator is pouring out upon a great nation and a noble people, is to be pro-German, then we accept the title as one of honor and worthy of an Irishman to wear."

I have not had access to the original copy of Sinn Fein to verify this; but, fortunately, there are two American reprints, both entirely free from the suggestion of British influence. One is an appendix to Mr. McGuire's book. The other is issued by the German-American Literary Defense Committee, 150 Nassau Street, New York.

These are expressions of sympathy. Let us come now to acts. We find them recorded in the "History of the Sinn Fein Movement," by Francis P. Jones, (1916,) for which this time John W. Goff stands sponsor.

The historian of the Sinn Fein movement quotes Casement as saying, in December, 1913: "The Irishman who * * * joins the British Army or Navy is a voluntary traitor to his country. His place is to prepare for the coming of the German. * * * Germany took Alsace-Lorraine by force from France in 1870, and has governed these provinces for forty years by what is termed 'brute force,' and against the will of the majority. Yet forty years of German 'tyranny' have brought extraordinary prosperity. * * *"

I commend this sentence to France, if light be desired there on the Sinn Fein movement.

Casement, as we know, tried to raise an Irish brigade from among prisoners of the British Army in Germany. As to the result of this venture, Mr. Goff's friend is extraordinarily reticent, but he does tell us the purpose: "The idea was to get them discharged from the prison camps, have them dressed in an Irish uniform, armed and equipped by the German General Staff, and transported to Ireland." It is odd to find Mr. Goff's friend denouncing as an outrageous lie the suggestion that there was a "German plot," almost on the same page.

This the more so, as he continues: "Meantime, the German Government was busy preparing the consignment of arms for Ireland. The vessel Aud was chartered for the purpose, and was loaded with 20,000 rifles, 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition, and fifteen machine guns. * * * The vessel was placed in charge of a special crew, and left Germany on April 12, (1916,) bound for Ireland. * * * The (German) officials in New York received a message from the (German) Imperial Government to the effect that the arms were being sent from Germany on April 12, and would be due in Ireland about Easter Sunday, (1916.) This was the date which had been arranged for the rising."

Casement also left Germany for Ireland on April 12 in a German submarine. Both vessels arrived off the coast of Kerry on April 20. Their fate is sufficiently known. Three days later the Sinn Fein rebellion broke out in Dublin. On Easter Sunday, April 23, 1916, a proclamation was issued by its leaders. The proclamation, facsimiles of which are available in New York, contained this sentence: "Ireland, supported by her exiled children in America and by gallant allies in Europe * * *" It cannot be said that there is reasonable doubt as to the identity of the Sinn Fein's "gallant allies."

Lessons in Unselfishness

If this war should have no other single beneficent result, it will have taught Americans a magnificent lesson in unselfishness.

Thinking for others, giving for others, self-denial for others—all these beautiful habits will take a deeper, firmer, root than ever they have before—and we needed it!

Let us exercise this habit of giving to the utmost. The Red Cross campaign has shown again how superbly America responds to appeals to the heart.

BLACK SATIN LEADS FOR EVENING GOWNS

Extreme Simplicity Still the Keynote of Styles—Bright Sashes Are Being Worn—Lace in General Favor and Used in Many Ways.

THE most interesting social event of the last week—at least the one where clothes had the best chance to shine—was, of all places, at the "movies." "Movies" de luxe they were, to be sure, of war and Pershing, and they were properly indorsed and sponsored. Therefore, who could blame those present at the first performance if they looked their prettiest? Evening clothes were much in evidence; they ranged from the most simple to those that could really be called gorgeous.

Perhaps it was the evening coats that were the most arresting because of the newness and lightness of their textures and designs. The heavy, all-enveloping velvets and furs of the Winter have been laid aside for good, and now we are permitted to see the fresh, fluffy things that will be used for Summer wear. They seemed even more attractive than the dresses themselves. At any rate, their wearers showed the rare good taste of allowing the cloak, when it was brilliant and a bit startling, to take all of the honors, wearing with it a gown of some sombre hue. This scheme was particularly attractive when the gown was black and the cloak some bright pastel shade.

One combination of this character consisted of a sort of coat wrap—one couldn't really tell whether it had started out along coat lines or on those of a cape—made of the brightest of American Beauty taffeta embroidered all over its surface in delicate little spots of gold and black brocade. The quality of the silk gave it a fresh, crisp appearance that was exceedingly smart. It was allowed to stand open in front, showing a low cut, black tulle gown as its accompaniment and foundation note of solid color.

Another stiff silk coat was a pastel shade of green of so lustrous a quality that its tone changed from one interesting shade to another as the light fell upon it at different angles. It was made with a deep yoke falling quite off the shoulders, and the lower section of the wrap was then gathered to this foundation yoke with a narrow heading, allowed to stand up all around above the repeated rows of shirring. It bagged in some way at the bottom and was cut off at a rounded line.

A stunning cape was made of crosswise sections of black and white, each strip being about ten or more inches wide. The black was velvet and the white a lustrous quality of moire silk, which made a most pleasing contrast. Then there was a wrap made of Corniche blue Georgette satin, which had, to give it a mark of distinction above all of its neighbors, a huge rolling collar made of brocaded velvet. This velvet was not the usual large figured sort, but was made up of a succession of tiny little flowers pushed closely together and each one of a different color—one violet, one yellow, one blue, and so on. There were big cuffs of the same material. Another cape coat of azalea red satin had narrow collars and cuffs of white fox fur.

One velvet cape stood out among the throng. It was of mulberry tone and was draped from a straight piece—not shaped in any particular. The quality of the velvet was light—of the chiffon variety—and it certainly had every claim to gracefulness, wrapped closely, as it was, about the figure.

The evening gowns were, with a very few exceptions, cut medium low, and they were made with extreme simplicity, though with the maximum of care and good taste. Some one who had made clothes a subject for study for many years has remarked that American women are better dressed this season than they have ever been before. And she gave as her theory of the reason for this that, because of necessity, women were giving more personal attention and thought to the making of their wardrobes; in other words, that they were allowing a little of their own individualities to creep into their costumes instead of wearing numerous and often-changed gowns designed by some other person. This may or may not be so; at any rate it is certain that women's dresses have seldom expressed so much of good taste as at the present time.

Several taffeta evening gowns were noticed, usually of some interesting and unusual color. Each was sure to have drapery for the distinguishing note of its construction, and it depended entirely upon line to make it attractive. There was one in a dull French blue, another in an apricot yellow, and still another in an elusive shade of violet.

Black satin dresses took the honors of the evening, for there were more of them, and they were more smartly made and worn than the frocks in any other class. Black satin has a wonderfully becoming quality about it. It is youthful for youth and suitable for old age, and in the gorgeous quality of heavy-backed satin which American manufacturers are making with such great success takes most alluring forms.

Among the smartest of these gowns of black was one done without a ray of trimming. It had a quite low neck and short, tight sleeves, with a draped skirt fuller at one side than on the other. Another, of the sort that hangs seemingly straight from the bust line, with only straps over the shoulders to keep it in place, was adorned with wide rows of jet put on around the skirt. They showed in the nature of tucks five inches or more wide, and they made a most effective trimming. Then, of course, there were narrow little jet strips at the shoulders.

A gown of blue and silver brocade had shoulder straps made of a foundation of maline with green and blue changeable beads sewed on in two rows. The beads were flat and oblong in shape, with much sparkle to them, making quite an interesting spot of ornamentation.

A choice few of the gowns were made of that heavy, clinging type of charmeuse in the charming colors that have lately been evolved. They had not large amounts of trimming to boast of, but what touches appeared were used to the full of their possibilities. One had a vestlike insertion of iridescent aquamarine blue spangles to supplement an orchid tone. Another had merely a girdle, placed at a decidedly low waistline, of malachite green on a background of pale, sulphur yellow.

One gown of black had a high, undraped girdle (really it extended from the waistline to a point under the arms) of Chinese blue. On top of this was a wide strip of coarsely woven lace, laid plain across the front from shoulder to shoulder and flowing off down the back to the end of the skirt. The arms were left bare, except for the touching of the strip of lace now and again.

Printed chiffon made its appearance in a quite ravishingly youthful frock. Black and white, or black on white, was the principle of the print. It looked like some bit of ancient wood-blocked fabric, and it was made quite exaggeratedly simple in order to give the beauty of the material a chance to shine. (this, by the way, is the secret of success with these new, printed fabrics; they are sufficient unto themselves and should be left undisturbed.) The skirt was full with a deep hem. The bodice was plainly gathered about a round, low neck, and the tight sleeves, ending just above the elbow, were finished with pointed flounces cut circular. The irresistible touch came in a cherry red girdle.

Bright sashes were a note of the evening. They are most effective when well handled and used without any other sort of trimming. Some were narrow and some wide, with butterfly bows and long fringed ends. Some were mere lines to suggest the place where a waist might be hidden, the cut of the frock having nothing whatever to say in that direction.

Chiffon and crêpe are not nearly so popular as they were during the last spell of warm weather, but they are still holding their own when it comes to a question of the youthful frock. There is something so naïve and simplified about a dress of light-toned chiffon drooping in graceful folds! One was made of two layers of different tones of yellow, and the only suggestion of trimming came in the shape of rows of beads apparently used for weights about the edges of the irregularly paneled skirt.

From all appearances lace has proved to be just as much of a favorite as the trade predicted it would be. It is used in all sorts and varieties of ways, and there is nothing that could be so lavish and at the same time so extremely simple as a bit of handsome lace. Black lace is seen most often, though there is more and more evidence that white lace is following in its wake. It is used for sleeves and shawls and overdresses in decidedly effective ways.

The skirt of a black satin gown was handsomely covered by three tiers of pleated chantilly lace done in the manner of flounces. Then there were little short sleeves tightly fitted made of the same lace.

A piece of rare black lace was used with a white gown in a very effective way. There was a little drooping shoulder cape, covering only the back of the shoulders and attached to the armholes in some way that made it look like a wing drapery when the arms were raised. This whole piece of white was covered by a piece of black lace of a scattered pattern.

Capes of lace are a revival, drawing in their wake sweet, old-fashioned memories and dreams. One of heavy black silk Spanish lace was seen, worn with a gown of soft white folds. The cape was shaped to accentuate sloping shoulders, and had long points at the front falling below the waist, while at the back it was gently rounded.

A yoke only at back, with short, tight sleeves, is a favorite method of using black lace. It has one great advantage of allowing the delicate tracery of the pattern of the lace to show to its full advantage, and the design of a gown of this sort allows the neck to be exposed in front. It is one of the varieties of what is called in the trade a "semi-evening dress," and is enjoying great popularity just now.

There was a gown all made of soft, lovely white lace, rather full and gracefully put together. Over this was draped a thin layer of black chiffon, forming the bodice and the skirt about three-quarters of the way down. It fell open in unexpected places to let the beauty of the lace appear and it made no attempt whatever to cover the sleeves, which were short and slightly puffed.

An interesting frock, of coarse white lace of the table linen variety, was made over a foundation of black satin. It had a long waist and a sash of bright bluish green. The little white skirt section was of accordion pleated muslin, edged by a band of heavy lace.

SKILLED NURSES AVAILABLE FOR WAR

Miss Nutting Differs with Dr. Goldwater—Arguments Against Curtailing of Training Courses.

MISS M. ADELAIDE NUTTING, director of the department of nursing and health at Teachers College and Chairman of the Committee on Nursing of the General Medical Board of the Council of National Defense, was asked the other day to give her views on the question of war nurses. She took as her text two recent articles on the nursing situation by Dr. S. S. Goldwater, director of Mount Sinai Hospital.

"In the first article," said Miss Nutting, "he states that 'the present plan for providing an adequate force of graduate nurses to care for the 150,000 additional patients which the hospitals of the country may have to receive within the next few years has been a failure.' He continues, 'Efforts to enlarge the training schools have not yielded substantial results,' and goes on to intimate that there is a nursing crisis which can only be met by the immediate training of large numbers of volunteer aids, who, he concludes, should be put under medical control.

"The second article elaborates this thesis. 'Two million men,' says Dr. Goldwater, 'are under arms,' adding in a later paragraph that 'it is reported that the Government will soon put another million men in the field, bringing our total armed forces up to 3,000,000.' Dr. Goldwater may perhaps be technically correct in saying that 3,000,000 men will soon be under arms, but the sense in which he wishes to be understood, if I read aright what he is trying to convey, is that 3,000,000 men will soon be in active service, and that as a consequence there will shortly be a large number of sick and wounded men requiring nursing—Dr. Goldwater says 400,000.

"But such estimates as these, while impressive, should hardly be interpreted as calling upon us for immediate action. Indeed, from such information as is accessible, there appears to be little probability that even 2,000,000 men will be in active service for some months to come. Even should the Autumn see 1,000,000 of our troops in France it is more than reasonable to believe that not all of them would be engaged in active hostilities immediately upon arrival; and a considerable proportion of this number would be utilized for other purposes than fighting. I speak of this, not to underestimate the amount of work ahead of us, in providing nurses to meet the need, but with the conviction that we must keep hold of the facts in the situation as well as we can if we are to handle it intelligently.

"For a definite statement of the need for nurses we can turn to no higher authority than the Surgeon General. On the basis of the present size of the United States Army he states that 24,000 nurses will be required by January, 1919.

"After pointing to 3,000,000 men under arms, and the 400,000 hospital beds which would then be necessary, Dr. Goldwater estimates that a nursing organization of 50,000 women will be needed, and states that 'during the last year the army and navy, with the help of the American Red Cross and the active support of hospitals, hospital committees and nursing organizations, have been endeavoring to enroll a number of nurses adequate to the need.' The number thus far enrolled, he says, is reported to be a little over 9,000.

"It is evident that some time must have elapsed since these figures were secured, since the actual number enrolled on May 1st was something over 20,000, according to information supplied by the Red Cross. Of these, 11,443 are on active duty and under orders, from statements given out by the heads of the Army and Navy Nurse Corps. Chiefly through volunteers, and with little effort, beyond the steady regular measures for enrollment, has this large number been built up. As yet there has been no tremendous effort, no widespread or comprehensive scheme of recruiting carried out, though I believe the Red Cross purposes launching some such plan soon. Two nurses from another part of the State, who came into one of the New York Red Cross offices recently, said they had not heard that there was any special need for nurses. They were very glad to know about it.

"Dr. Goldwater says that there is no justification for believing, in the light of the last year's experience, that the new drive for 1,000 graduate nurses monthly will bring an actual enrollment of any such number. But the Director of the Nursing Department of the Red Cross says that the enrollment has been about a thousand a month for the last year, and last month it is stated to have reached 1,200. If so large a number has continued to flow in each month without active and systematic general recruiting, there is some reason for believing that the enrollments will be a good deal larger when an energetic and country-wide recruiting scheme gets under way.

"Next comes Dr. Goldwater's statement, which he has thought important enough to put in italics, that the country cannot spare the number the army requires. If we accept, as I think we must, the Surgeon General's last estimate of 24,000 nurses for army requirements, let us see what resources we have to draw upon to provide them

"There are slightly over 98,000 registered nurses in this country; allowing the liberal estimate of 10 per cent. depreciation for ineligibles for various causes, and deducting 20,000 for those already enrolled, we have 68,000 nurses to draw upon. Now the great majority of these nurses, at least 85 per cent., are engaged in private nursing, and it is to this field that we must now turn. Not only is the supply of superintendents, assistants, and instructors in hospitals and training schools quite inadequate for their need, but these institutions have already contributed largely to the number of nurses now in active service. It is a grave question whether we can afford to allow them to be much further depleted. The actual work of nursing in hospitals is largely taken care of by the 48,000 students now recorded in their training schools.

"In the newly developing public health field there are only about 6,000 nurses, and here, too, the need is urgent. Inasmuch as hospital and training school and public health work all require nurses of special training and experience, their places cannot be filled, but we can call out our private nurses because we have reserves available for work in that field. First, there are 17,000 graduate nurses trained in small or special schools not eligible for registration nor consequently for the Red Cross Nursing Service, and back of these a large army of trained attendants and practical or experienced nurses There were over 126,000 of these in the census of 1910. Of course the number is greatly increased now. Both the actual supply and the reserves in this field are good. We should look to it to release for the needs of the nation a substantial body of nurses. In this very prosperous, luxurious country the employment of trained nurses for trifling ailments has become a habit, and the number of them occupied in families where their services as nurses are now necessary is very great indeed.

"In this time of crisis it is essential that those who can afford the luxury of private nurses should be as scrupulous in the use of this precious asset of our national resources as they are in the use of wheat and of fuel. Every person should be as uncomfortable in employing a nurse whose time is not fully needed as that person would be in hoarding wheat or coal. In this critical hour it is unthinkable that our people will not exercise the self-denial which will release such nurses from private individual service to public duty. The needs of our fighting men come first.

"But this forms only the beginning of our resources. There will be over 13,000 nurses graduating from our 1,879 registered training schools for nurses during the year 1918. They are pouring out, as I write, in hundreds—young, vigorous, competent, and eager for service. From some schools over 50 per cent. have enrolled immediately.

"And, finally, if these sources do not fully supply the need, there is yet another reserve, and there should be no hesitation in drawing upon it. This lies in the senior classes of our schools of nursing. These nurses have already had two full years of training. They are valuable, skilled workers, as every hospital can testify. Their transfer to military hospitals would not mean that their training would cease, but that it would be continued, and their diplomas given on the satisfactory completion of the required term. This precedent has already been established in the case of certain groups of medical students.

"Its extension is both desirable and practicable, and through it a large potential source of supply will be opened up. The Government might ask for as many as 50 per cent. of all senior students. With this possibility in mind and with the certainty that the need for trained nurses, both in the army and at home, would increase as war progressed, the Committee on Nursing of the General Medical Board, Council of National Defense, took energetic steps at the very outset of the war to increase greatly the number of students entering our hospital training schools. The result of these efforts has exceeded all expectations. Not 2,700 new students, as Dr. Goldwater states in his first article, have entered. That number is of last October, but somewhat over 7,000 have now been admitted as an increment beyond the usual number annually entering such schools. This increase in the student body, which is still going on, is a fact of large significance. So long as we maintain this policy in our schools the future is safeguarded, and any measures which threaten to diminish the supply of regular students, as would the widespread inauguration of short courses, is seen to be an unstatesmanlike attempt to provide for the moment at any expense to the future. We do not handle our other great problems in any such hand-to-mouth fashion.

"A comprehensive and carefully worked out plan for an army school of nursing is now before the war department. If established, as we believe it will be, it will provide a large and steady increase in the actual nursing forces. It will afford an excellent opportunity for genuine training for all women who are really serious in their wish to serve their country, and who are fitted for this branch of the service. The plan includes a widespread system of affiliations with civil hospitals, and provides for the sick soldier, who is primarily a sick man, the benefits of a nursing system which gives the most satisfactory nursing service the world has ever seen—that maintained in our civil hospitals through our student nursing service. This has a stability, a purpose, a life and vigor entirely its own, and stands out among educational systems of the day. We who have lived and worked in it know its excellence, know its results, and have no question whatever as to the wisdom and good sense of installing it in our military hospitals.

"The system that will give the sick men the best nursing care is what we want, and the student nursing service has stood the test of time on that point. It is not only the most efficient, but the most economical, and is better and safer from every point of view. The young woman entering this service as a student becomes your true volunteer aid. She becomes a genuine asset to her country.

"The plan has had the approval of the Surgeon General, of the heads of the Army Nurse Corps, and of the Nursing Department of the American Red Cross, of the Committee on Nursing, Council of National Defense, and of all three national nurses' associations. It further has the strong support of women outside of the profession who might perhaps, if they choose, be termed members of what Dr. Goldwater calls the 'leisure class.' In this cherished democracy of ours I confess to a distinct dislike for the term, and especially in wartime. Incidentally, this plan, when set in operation, will release for service elsewhere many regular army nurses now stationed in our home military hospitals.

"Dr. Goldwater fears that the enrolling of a large number of student nurses in the army schools would divert a considerable proportion of the normal supply from civil hospitals. But the system of affiliations, providing for a constant interchange of students, would be likely to increase rather than diminish the supply of applicants to training schools of civil hospitals. This danger, however, is real in so far as short courses are concerned, and they could hardly fail to have an injurious effect upon the flow of candidates into training schools. It would take a young woman of heroic mental proportions to decide to enter a training school for the regular training when she could, through a few weeks of training, satisfy her heart's desire to 'nurse the wounded.' It does not require any great amount of acumen to foresee that the widespread establishment of short courses would almost inevitably greatly reduce the number of students for the regular courses, and we should find ourselves two or three years hence facing a real shortage of nurses.

"Dr. Goldwater is anxious, again, as to the possible sudden cessation of hostilities, and its effect upon army schools. No matter when hostilities cease, there will be a long period, many months probably, before our military hospitals will be emptied and closed and their patients restored to civil life. There can hardly be any doubt that in our many hundreds of civil hospitals room will gladly be found for any partly trained students to complete their training. Every welcome would be accorded them, every allowance made.

"Again Dr. Goldwater is disturbed with the thought that there might be an excessive number of professional nurses in the country immediately after the war, that 'competition might be intensified and professional standards endangered.' The trained nurses of this country are entirely willing to risk the dangers of such competition and such endangering of their professional standards. They do not fear the competition of other nurses.

"There are two important branches of nursing in which a healthy competition might be helpful. We need about 5,000 nurses of substantial attainments, educationally, professionally and personally, to guide and develop the vitally important work of our great hospital training schools and maintain them on a satisfactory educational basis. Also in the great field of public health, which, however rapidly it may have developed in the past, must expand in the future in many directions, the country needs not 6,000 public health nurses, but thrice that number.

"It was estimated a few years ago that the public schools of the country alone could profitably occupy 10,000 more trained nurses in safeguarding the health of our children. It is said that there is a great shortage in the nursing field, in hospitals, registries, &c., and it is, of course, to be expected that there would be some shortage, but nothing has been more surprising than the comparative ease with which this country has so far met the demand for nurses. The cry of shortage is not new. It was pressed upon us from many quarters from July to the end of December of last year, and yet during that period our investigators found registries overflowing with nurses for whom there were not calls. In some cities as many as twenty or thirty nurses were idle upon the registries. Not until the beginning of this year was there any evidence of a general nature that we were beginning to feel the withdrawal of nurses from the general service of the country.

"Dr. Goldwater speaks of certain hospital training schools in this country lacking applicants, but this situation is not new, and the number of hospitals finding difficulty in attracting applicants is probably smaller now than usual. As an opposing picture we can show a very much larger number of hospital training schools receiving more applicants today than they can admit. The Mount Sinai Hospital, of which Dr. Goldwater is the very able Director, has many applicants to its excellent school of nursing, and is able to direct many of them to less fortunate hospitals. It is well known today that most hospitals offering good opportunities for training from a clinical standpoint, good living conditions, a satisfactory system of instructon and a modern system of hours, have a constant flow of applicants far beyond their capacity to receive. A shortage of applicants is not a situation due to the war, but it is a situation which may be remedied by the war in a large measure, if only a statesmanlike view of the whole problem is taken and adequate and far-sighted measures established to meet the problem squarely and fully.

"In this great crisis in our nation's history the nurses of this country wish to be equal to the demands made upon them, and to offer to the sick men of our army and to the people of the country the best fruits of their years of training and experience. Up to the present time the call of our army for nurses has been promptly and adequately met. The supply, indeed, has been steadily ahead of the needs, and nurses in hundreds have been mobilized and available weeks in advance of orders. In meeting the actual needs as they have arisen, and in the creation of new and large resources to meet the needs of the future, the work of the nurses of this country has been a success and an achievement."

OUTDOOR EVENTS ATTRACT SOCIETY

Tuxedo Horse Show Early in June for Red Cross—Woman's Naval Service to Sponsor Aerial Warfare Film Exhibition—Country Weddings for June Brides—National Music Show to Aid Soldiers.

THE open season has started in with auspicious events, with the climax of the week for outdoor activities falling due on Memorial Day. Horse and motor racing, country club fêtes, and garden parties are now the order of the day, bringing to society that refreshing relaxation after a long season of war relief work.

This program does not necessarily mean that society will be gay or brilliant, for each affair has its patriotic side. But relaxation has become a sort of war measure of itself, as evidenced by the events staged and the pastimes encouraged abroad, even within range of the German batteries.

Society in New York and throughout the country has gone over the top in its magnitude of war relief work and service, and there can be no criticism when it pauses to relax.

The Tuxedo Charity Horse Show will be held on June 7 and 8, at Tuxedo Park, in aid of the Tuxedo Auxiliary of the American Red Cross. This event will attract society in large numbers.

Mrs. David Wagstaff is Chairman of the Executive Committee, W. Rossiter Betts Treasurer, and W. S. Blitz of 35 Nassau Street Secretary. Other members of the committee include Mrs. E. M. Weld, Mrs. Forsyth Wickes, W. M. V. Hoffman, E. Victor Loew, Pierre Lorillard, Charles S. Patterson, Henry M. Tilford, and John R. Townsend.

Letters from war workers in France are always of interest. Some tell of the comedy that brightens the tragic hours. Miss Eleanor Dulles, niece of the Secretary of State and Mrs. Lansing, writing from Paris, tells many incidents of her work with the Red Cross among the Belgian and French refugees.

"I was sent to a temporary canteen in two school buildings for the refugees pouring through Paris," writes Miss Dulles. "It was a wonderfully lucky thing I was given this work, for several of us had planned to go to church to hear the music, and, as you doubtless know, that shelling began again and killed nearly a hundred people in that church.

"Two hundred refugees came to our place that night. With unrestrained grief they all showed what they had been suffering. Some of them sat exhausted with staring eyes—not crying nor talking—they said they were not hungry. As quickly as possible we led them to bed—that is, to the eighty-five mattresses for the 200 of them. When there was no more room we arranged blankets on benches and tables.

"The one interruption to the night was a sad one. A 13-month-old baby of one of the women died. We sent for a doctor, but he came too late. We could not comfort the poor little mother, who had none of her family with her.

"One old lady with unbounded energy ran around all night looking for a covered basket. We could not calm her, and she went clattering about with her sabots, muttering to herself that she must 'catch it.'

"When the women hear that we give clothes and shoes and food to refugees, they come, bringing their children, to ask if they also may receive the gifts that have been sent from America by people who have been willing to go without themselves, to help the poor war sufferers."

While these are only extracts from Miss Dulles's letters, they come as an inspiration as the Red Cross drive draws to a close.

MAY will pass out this week with very few society weddings to her credit, shunned as she is by the brides, owing to some remnant of superstition left over from the Middle Ages. But the war weddings become more numerous as the days lengthen. Fifty marriage ceremonies, it is said, were performed at Camp Dix in three days last week.

It might be said now that the girl who hesitates is lost, from the matrimony standpoint, for her soldier fiancé may be within call today and far out at sea on the morrow on his way to the front.

It was the officers and men who had arranged to be married sometime during the week-end that urged upon the Camp Dix officials to permit their fiancées to visit them to be married. One Chaplain alone, during the three days, united in marriage thirty-two couples.

The June weddings will be largely celebrated in the country, which is brightly verdant and blooming. The exodus to the country has been increasing of late, although not much mention has been made of the fact, for people with their war duties pressing remain in town, with only week-end flights to their country places. Those who are to have a marriage in their family have settled in the country for the season.

The wedding of Miss Isabel Battell Bridgman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Bridgman of New York and Norfolk, Conn., and George Griswold is to take place on Saturday, June 15, at Fox Hill, the Norfolk residence of the bride's parents.

Miss Bridgman's engagement was announced last December. Mr. Griswold is the son of the late George Griswold of this city and Tuxedo Park, and has made his home with his aunt, Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer. He is a nephew of Frank Gray Griswold.

Miss Ethel M. Huhn, daughter of Mrs. George A. Huhn of 70 East Seventy-seventh Street, who is to marry Lieutenant Joseph W. Biddle, Jr., on June 22 in Philadelphia, will have her cousin, Mrs. Morgan Belmont, as her matron of honor. The bridesmaids will include the Misses Alexandra B. Dolan, Agnes Brockie, Pauline Denckla, Lisa Norris, Marianna W. Gowen, and Edith Wallach.

The marriage of Miss Mary A. Sayles, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Sayles of Providence, R. I., and Neville J. Booker of this city is to be celebrated on June 8 at the bride's home.

On June 1 Captain Chester B. McLaughlin, Jr., of the Quartermaster Corps, and son of Judge and Mrs. Chester B. McLaughlin of Albany, will wed Miss Margaret Fairlie Williston, daughter of Professor and Mrs. Samuel Williston, in Cambridge, Mass. Lieutenant Warner McLaughlin of this city is to be his brother's best man.

Among the early June brides in the Oranges will be Miss Inez Evelyn Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Seward Foster of Harrison Street, East Orange, N. J., who will be married Saturday evening to Frank G. Tallman, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Tallman of Wilmington, Del. The ceremony is to be performed by the Rev. Charles Thomas Walkley, rector of Grace Church, Orange, and will be followed by a reception.

A wedding yesterday of interest was that of Miss Beatrice Wood, daughter of Mrs. Benjamin Wood of this city, and Paul Remsen of Brussels, Belgium, who has been engaged in the mining business in Canada. The ceremony was performed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Hapgood at Hanover, N. H. Mr. Remsen's father, the late Paul Remsen, was for some time the legal adviser of the King of Belgium. His mother is living in Belgium, but for some months he has been unable to communicate with her. The bride was a proficient dancer and appeared at many affairs after her coming out. She was reared in Paris, and speaks French like a native. She joined the Théâtre Français here and made a success, and has recently been appearing in French plays in Montreal.

The marriage has been announced of Miss Irene Sylvester, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. Waters Sylvester of Passaic, N. J., and Captain R. Walston Chubb of the 342d Field Artillery, now stationed at Camp Funston, which took place in Kansas City on May 18. Captain Chubb is the son of Percival Chubb of St. Louis, well known as a public speaker and author.

Sarony, Fifth Avenue.

CARDINAL FARLEY will preside at the Hippodrome concert this evening, when John McCormack sings for the benefit of the Catholic Orphan Asylum of New York. Among the patronesses are Mrs. David McClure, Mrs. Charles Astor Bristed, Mrs. Morgan J. O'Brien, Countess de Laugier-Villars, Mrs. De Lancey Kane, Mrs. Munson Gallaudet Shaw, Mrs. Schuyler Warren, Mrs. John G. Agar, Mrs. Joseph P. Grace, Mrs. Francis B. Hoffman, Mrs. Seton Henry, and Mrs. Stuart Pullman West.

There will be a private exhibition of a loan collection of Revolutionary and Colonial relics on Tuesday, at 3 o'clock, at Washington's Headquarters, 160th Street, near Amsterdam Avenue, under the auspices of the Washington Headquarters' Association.

A progressive blanket party is to be given by Auxiliary 215 of the American Red Cross tomorrow afternoon in the workrooms of the Broadway Presbyterian Church, at 114th Street. The women of the organization have crocheted and knitted nine-inch squares out of odds and ends of wool and have made over a hundred blankets, which have been sent to France and to our own base hospitals. Prizes are to be awarded to the fastest workers.

A committee of prominent people has been formed for the purpose of assisting the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. and raising funds to provide music for our boys who are in France and also in cantonments in this country. It includes Mrs. J. F. D. Lanier, Mrs. Linzee Blagden, Dr. Frank Damrosch, Mrs. Samuel Untermyer, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Henry Harkness Flagler, Mrs. Leopold Stokowski, Harold Bauer, Carlos Salzedo, George Barrere, Louis Koemmenich, and others. Walter Maynard has been appointed Treasurer, and the Guaranty Trust Company is the depository for the fund.

At the National Music Show, which is to be held in Grand Central Palace June 1 to 8, the entire proceeds of the sale of tickets, both prior to and during the exposition, will go for the purchase of phonograph and piano player records and musical instruments for the soldiers. Not one cent is to be subtracted for expenses or salaries of any sort, so that every half dollar paid for a ticket will buy 50 cents worth of musical equipment at wholesale prices. The actual purchase of this will be in the hands of the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., which is thoroughly informed as to the requirements of the various camps, both here and abroad.

At a meeting held at Mrs. Lanier's home the latter part of the week, at which the majority of the committee were present, steps were taken to enlist the aid of all of the musical societies in this city and vicinity, and some of these already have subscribed for thousands of tickets each to sell to their members. In addition to this an appeal is being sent to thousands of music lovers in the metropolitan district who are known to patronize musical entertainments.

The exposition will occupy four floors of the Grand Central Palace, and will be replete with features and displays revealing all that is latest in the musical instrument line. Each afternoon and evening, in the specially arranged theatre which will be designed along the lines of one of the cantonment Liberty theatres, prominent operatic artists and others will appear, all giving their services. The various stars who sing for the phonograph companies will appear and render excellent programs, combining classical and popular music. Large choruses of several hundred voices will be a feature each day, and one phonograph company has arranged to practically transplant its factory to the palace and show each stage of the taking and making of a phonograph record with their full corps of artists on hand.

Moving pictures of aerial warfare and the official films of the French Government will be shown at the Greenwich Theatre on Friday evening. A distinguished aviator is to describe the films and speak in the interest of aviation. The proceeds are to be given to the Recreation Committee of the Woman's Naval Service of 289 Madison Avenue, under whose auspices the entertainment is to be held.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. Elon H. Hooker, Mrs. J. Kennedy Tod, Mrs. John H. Flagler, Mrs. Leslie Bruce, Mrs. Frederick Ewing, Mrs. Thomas K. Chadbourne, Jr., Mrs. Frank Thorp, Mrs. E. C. Converse, Mrs. George C. Clausen, and Mrs. F. B. Vanderhoef.

The patrons and patronesses for "Biff Bang," the revue to be presented at the Century Theatre by the sailors of the Naval Training Camp, starting Decoration Day matinée, include the following:

Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Mr. and Mrs. Edward N. Breitung, Mrs. James A. Burden, Duchesse de Chaulnes, Duc and Duchesse de Richelieu, Mrs. William Disston, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, Miss Mabel Gerry, Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould, Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Warner M. Leeds, Miss Elisabeth Marbury, Mrs. Charles Marshall, Mrs. Paul Morton, Mrs. Frederick Neilson, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. Alexander Dallas Bache, Mrs. Harold I. Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. Ogden M. Reid, Dr. and Mrs. Ernest M. Stires, Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, E. Coster Wilmerding, Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. John McGee, and Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James.

The New York Chamber Music Society, Miss Carolyn Beebe director and manager, has announced a series of four consecutive Friday afternoon musicales to be given in Greenwich, Conn. The first will be given on June 7, at Indian Harbor, the home of Commodore E. C. Benedict, Mrs. Clifford B. Harmon being the hostess. The second, at the residence of Mrs. Seymour Jairus Hyde, on June 14; the third, at the home of Mrs. Winchester Fitch, and the fourth and last at the home of Mrs. Robert A. C. Smith.

The opening of the Turf and Field Club at Belmont Park yesterday, which was coincident with the annual spring race meeting of the United Hunts, furnished a society event out of the ordinary, in that it attracted many well-known people of the metropolis and officers of the allied armies desirous of riding in and witnessing the international military race.

BUSINESS STATUS OF COLLEGE WOMEN

Census of Nine Colleges Shows Wide Variety of Occupations.

THE Association of Collegiate Alumnæ, in co-operation with several women's colleges, has made an investigation into certain phases of the economic and personal status of the alumnæ of these colleges which presents many interesting facts. As the statistics include the graduates of 1915, the census is of special value because it establishes the status of a large group of women graduates practically up to the time of the entrance of the United States into the war.

Conditions caused by the war are likely to make a difference in the economic status of women, so that the census will offer valuable material for comparison with conditions and results after the changes due to the war have produced their effects.

Eight colleges for women, Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Mount Holyoke, Radcliffe, Smith, Vassar, Wellesley, and Wells, and one co-educational university, Cornell, are included in the survey. In the journal of the association for May Mary Van Kleeck makes a digest of the statistics.

The chief purpose of the inquiry, she says, was to obtain information about the occupations of college women, and therefore the greater part of the information it gives is concerned with their economic status. Reports were obtained from 10,730 graduates, and of these 11,163 (69.7 per cent.) had been gainfully employed. More than half of these have been employed in teaching, or have united teaching with some other gainful employment.

Those who have taken up other occupations than teaching, of whom the percentage is 22.8 of all graduates, have entered upon a long and most varied array of vocations. The list of them shows how rapidly and widely the doors of employment have been opening to women prepared to enter them. It has long been the general impression that this is true, and these figures offer the proof.

The list of occupations other than teaching in which college women were employed in 1915 fills two pages of the Journal. Under agriculture are included Shetland pony breeders, dairy farmers, farm managers, orange growers, greenhouse managers, estate superintendents, and ten other classifications.

In Government service there are inspectors of many sorts, civil service examiners, scientific workers, clerical workers, agents, commissioners.

The theatre has proved attractive to a few college women, of whom eleven are listed as actors and ten others as managers, producers, entertainers, and coaches.

Under business appears a great variety of vocations, the number of women thus engaged being the third largest in the list. Those engaged in social service work have the largest number, 471, while library work comes second with 293 and business claims 289. Under this classification one finds women engaged in such diverse employments as engineering and contracting, banking, printing, hotel management, as visiting household accountant, owner and manager of a riding school, manager detective agency.

Art, both fine and applied, has a representation, including scientific, engineering, mechanical, and architectural draftsmen, designers, landscape architects, and—unique among them all—a "painter of fishes for a taxidermist."

Practically all the professions are represented and more than a dozen of the sciences, from archaeology to zoology. Among the unclassified occupations are cable code expert and maker of codes, professional shopper, conductor of European tours, hostess, and manager of State House at expositions, judge of domestic science exhibits at State and county fairs in five States yearly.

More than four thousand women reported their earnings for the year, of whom 3,034 were teachers and 1,040 were in other occupations. Those in other occupations were better paid, for the median earnings for teachers amounted to $995 and for the others $1,065. The highest median earnings in the various groups were those of women in theatrical pursuits and the lowest in agriculture.

Some of the maximum earnings reported were that of the head and owner of a large school, $35,000; a literary woman, author of a novel which had been successful both as book and play, $24,000, (she added on her card that some years she made very little;) a physician and surgeon in private practice for fifteen years reported $9,000; an orange grower with twenty-one years' experience, $8,000; one business woman earned $5,000; one woman had $15,000 as half the joint earnings of her husband and herself in the management of a group of Summer camps for girls.

The statistics of marriages and birth rates, Miss Van Kleeck suggests, should be studied with caution, because the early classes of women graduates were small and the younger alumnæ far outnumber the older ones. Therefore, since many of them are still young and unmarried, they overweight the percentages and make them not wholly representative. She thinks that "three decades or five decades hence it will be possible to study the statistics of college women as facts of a history which is closed for a sufficiently large number to make final statements."

Of 16,739 graduates of all ages included in the census, 6,544, or 39.1 per cent., were married. The distribution of percentages among the nine colleges shows that the higher percentage of marriages is found among the alumnæ of the older institutions. Out of the total of 6,544 marriages only 37 had been divorced, with more than half of that number, 20, belonging to the group graduated between 1900 and 1910. The percentage of all divorces to marriages was only 57-100 of 1 per cent.

It appears that employment affects marriage, for of the total number who have been gainfully employed only 30.5 per cent. were married, while of those who had never been thus employed 58.9 were married. The percentage of marriage is higher among teachers than among those engaged in other vocations, while the lowest of all the percentages is among those who had tried both teaching and other work.

"Apparently," concludes Miss Van Kleeck, "the more varied the vocational experience the less frequent the marriage of college graduates." Collegiate education appears to defer marriage, for the average age at marriage of those who had been gainfully employed was 28 years and 1 month, and of those who had followed no vocation was 26 years and 1 month. As the average age at graduation is 22 years, it would seem that the tendency is to defer marriage for five or six years.

Of the married graduates 69.9 per cent. had children, averaging 2.1 per family. One Wellesley graduate reported 11 children, and for none of the colleges was the maximum number of children less than 6. In the entire group of married graduates 20 per cent. had 3 children or more. That the percentage of children is affected by the large number of younger graduates whose families are not complete is indicated by the much higher percentages of the older groups. Of the graduates in classes previous to 1880, the proportion having children is 80.7, and the average number of children per family 2.9.

But it is to be noted that the mortality rate among the children of college women is low. Of all the children born to women included in the census only 6.7 in every 100 had died and only 4.5 per cent. had died during their first year. In studies of infant mortality made by the Federal Children's Bureau the rate in Manchester, N. H., was found to be 16.5; in Johnstown, Penn., 13.4, and in Montclair, N. J., a residential suburb having exceptionally good living conditions, 8.5.

College women appear to prefer college men for husbands, for 78.8 per cent. of the married women in this census had married college graduates. Wellesley held the highest percentage of the collegiate alliances, 91.3, while Cornell came next with 83.4, and Wells was the lowest. Nearly half of these husbands follow professional vocations.

TWO Y. M. C. A. SCHOOLS

THE enlargement and building of new acid and chemical works incident to the war created a demand for lead burners, to prepare vats and pipes and troughs for use. The New York West Side Y. M. C. A. opened the first school for the purpose in the world. Intensive training for a few weeks turned out men competent to meet the emergency, and almost as soon as other construction work at the plants was well under way lead burners were trained to do their part. This school was kept up until the plants were supplied and then closed down, but its equipment is ready at a moment's notice to train another set of men if required.

The Y. M. C. A. Automobile School, opened by the West Side Y. M. C. A. fifteen years ago, has trained 16,000 chauffeurs and auto mechanics, a large percentage of whom are now doing war work. In the last four years enrollments for this training have included 1,000 women. The motor supply train, which traveled from Detroit to Atlanta recently, was driven, in part, by women. Mrs. E. L. Dillingham of New York City, captain of the woman's group of Y. M. C. A. chauffeurs, is one of forty women who are driving autos and trucks in patriotic service at the present time.

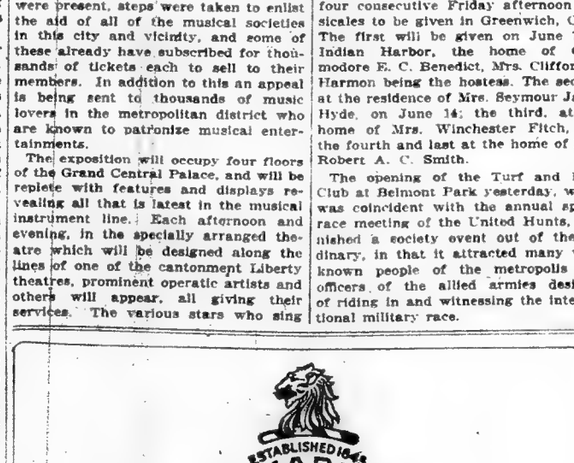
Safety Wrist Watch Holder
(Pat. applied for.)



Experience at the front has proven that wrist watches should be covered and protected from breakage.

Hundreds of Soldiers have lost their lives by wearing open face wrist watches. The wearer discloses his position, as well as that of his comrades, to the enemy, by the sunlight reflecting on the metal in daytime, and the radium glow showing at night.

The KNYVETT HOLDER covers the open face watch, and discloses dial only to wearer. The watch lying face down is protected from damage and the crystal from breakage.

CAPT. R. HUGH KNYVETT, the author of "Over There With the Australians," invented this holder and used one two years in the trenches.

AUSTRIA'S FATE HINGES ON WEST FRONT BATTLE

Oppressed Nationalities of Hapsburg Empire Will Doubtless Rise if Germans Are Checked by Allies in France

By ELMER DAVIS.

AUSTRIA'S first war Parliament, summoned nearly three years after the outbreak of the conflict, has been adjourned by the Emperor after eleven months of violent but unproductive activity. In those eleven months Austrian internal affairs went through a succession of remarkable changes, every one of which was mirrored in the Parliamentary debates; and the closing of Parliament was practically an admission of the impossibility of reconciling an assembly which even imperfectly represents the peoples of the empire with the present Austrian Government.

It is predicted in many quarters that an Austrian Parliament will never sit again, though it has been summoned for June 19, but that depends on the outcome of the fighting in France. There have been comparisons between the position of Emperor Charles I. of Austria and that of King Charles I. of England, but there is a very important element of difference. Charles of England ruled over a homogeneous people whose revolution was one of political and religious radicalism. Charles of Austria rules over half a dozen peoples of which one is dominant; and the one thing that has been accomplished in the last eleven months in Austria is the clarification of the nationalist issues, the demonstration of the impossibility of a federalized Austria, the unification of the submerged nationalities in demands for complete independence; and last and perhaps most important, the beginnings of a working agreement of all these nationalities against the Germans.

When the Parliament adjourned in the Spring of 1914 nobody dreamed that it would not meet again for three years. The rulers of Austria knew, however, that there was going to be a war before long, and since a convenient article of the Constitution gives the Emperor the power to govern without Parliament when he feels like it, and since the heads of the empire knew that the Slavic nationalities would be bitterly opposed to war with Russia and Serbia, they refrained from calling Parliament, not only when their war had broken out, but for a long time after.

In the Spring of 1917, however, it could not be longer deferred. The Austrian armies had been defeated again and again; they were being held up by Germany, and thousands of Austrian Slavs had gone over to the enemy and were now fighting on the other side. Economic distress throughout the empire was intensified by the seething discontent of the subjected nationalities. Still more important was the Russian revolution. The most powerfully intrenched of autocracies, just across the frontier, had been overthrown; Russian ideas were spreading through Europe, the impending collapse of the Russian armies was not yet realized. America was about to come in, and the war was obviously transforming itself into a struggle between autocracy and democracy.

Add to this the advent of a new, young and inexperienced Emperor in the place of the old and stiffnecked Francis Joseph, a young man of amiable impulses who hated the war, felt that France had a just claim on Alsace-Lorraine, and was doing his best at that time to get out of the whole affair if he could do it without loss of prestige, territory, or power. While the chief cause of the reconvening of Parliament was the Russian revolution and its repercussions, another Emperor might have stayed it off for some time. And one of the most interesting features of the past year has been the development of the young Emperor Charles, his reaction from liberalism and willingness for peace as he realized that his Austria could never be the same again; his final flight into the arms of the Germans, the Magyars, and the Austrian ruling classes before the demand of his subordinate nationalities for the right to rule themselves. As the Vienna correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung lately remarked, the Austrian crisis is one not of the Government, but of the State. At least the western half of the Dual Monarchy is on the verge of disintegration.

But this disintegration is not likely to come at once; in the opinion of observers most familiar with Austro-Hungarian conditions, it will not come until the German armies in France receive a severe defeat. The reasons for which conclusion may be seen by a study of the career of the Parliament which has just closed.

The Parliament which the Emperor summoned to meet in Vienna on May 31 consisted of 517 members. Of these, 233 were Germans, 108 Czechs, 92 Poles, 42 Jugoslavs, 33 Ruthenians, and 19 Italians. This is the first thing to remember about an Austrian Parliament: that primarily it splits not according to parties, but according to nationalities; and in times past, as well as to some extent in this session, the German minority has been able to rule over the deputies of the subject races by an alliance with the Poles, who have been given special privileges over their Ukrainian neighbors in Ruthenia, which have made them steady supporters—until the last year or so—of the Hapsburgs.

But each of these national groups is split into parties; and one of the outstanding developments in the session just closed has been the solidification of all the parties, even the Socialists, of the minority nationalities around a program which demanded national unity and independence first, and settlement of internal questions afterward.

Among the Germans, on the other hand, the parties have drawn more widely apart. The hundred or so Deputies of the German National Alliance, the Pan German element, are the most extreme reactionaries; they are supported for the most part by the other German bourgeois parties; but the German Socialists have steadily become more and more Bolshevist, and for practical purposes they have often co-operated with the unified parties of the minority nationalities.

It was evident at the opening of Parliament that the great internal question was the giving of autonomy to the nationalities, which are at present split up into seventeen provinces (Kronländer) whose boundaries are feudal survivals and in no case correspond with those of a nationality. In Bohemia there is a German minority; in the Adriatic provinces German and Italian minorities among a Slovene majority, and so on. And the realization of this problem was evidently in the Emperor's mind on the occasion of his speech from the throne at the opening of Parliament, when he said:

> The happy development of our constitutional life after the unfruitfulness of past years and after the exceptional political conditions of wartime is just possible without expanding the constitutional and administrative foundations of our whole public life, both in the State (i. e., Austria as a whole) and in the separate kingdoms and countries, especially in Bohemia. It is our task to create conditions give scope to the free national and cultural development of equally privileged peoples.

If this means anything, it means that the Emperor was willing to stand for a federalization of Austria—and not only Austria but Hungary; the alteration of the present system by which the Germans in one-half of the Dual Monarchy and the Magyars in the other dominate the Slavs and Latins of the submerged nationalities; and not only such an alteration as would be implied if he had carried out Francis Joseph's broken promise to have himself crowned King of Bohemia, but a real federalization, the union of all the parts of each nationality into a single state of the federated empire.

But if the Emperor would have been willing at that time to see such a development there were those who were not. These were first of all the Germans of the German Empire, for whom a federalized Austria in which the progressive Western Slav nations would have a real power would no longer be a willing vassal; next the Germans of Austria, unwilling to resign their racial supremacy; third, the privileged classes of the Dual Monarchy, the nobility, army officers, and higher clergy, to whom any democratic development was anathema; and, fourth, the Magyars, more secure in their domination of their submerged nationalities than the Austrians and bitterly hostile to any attempt to reorganize the Dual Monarchy on a national basis. And while theoretically the Magyars have nothing to do with Austria, they have in effect held the whip hand during the last year; for Austria is short of food and Hungary has plenty of it.

So it was rather an evil omen when, at the close of the Emperor's speech, the cheers in half a dozen languages drowned out the national anthem.

On May 30, the day before the meeting of Parliament, the Czech Deputies of all groups had met and demanded the union of the Czechs of Austria and the Slovaks of Hungary into a solid national State. The Jugoslavs of all parties had met and demanded the union of the Slovenes in Austria, the Croats and Serbs in Hungary, and the Serbs in Bosnia and Herzegovina into a solid national State. In each of these groups there was a large faction which, following the lead of the committees of exiles in the Entente nations and of their troops who had gone over to the Serbs and Russians, demanded absolute independence. But the text of the resolutions demanded only self-determination and autonomy; if the Emperor, the Germans, and the Magyars had met them half way, it is probable, though not certain, that a federalized Austria might have resulted. Today it is certain that whatever happens Austria and Hungary will not be federalized. If the Allies win a sweeping victory the nationalities may presumably look forward to independence. If the war ends in a compromise the domination of German and Magyar will become still more oppressive.

The outburst of protest against the resolutions of May 30 in Hungary, as well as among the Pan Germans of Austria, was the first sign that the "new, rejuvenated Austria" of which the Emperor had spoken was a long way off. The German National Alliance, by some juggling in the house, succeeded in getting Dr. Gustav Gross, their leader, elected President of Parliament. And then began a session which in disorder, tumult, vituperation, and inability to get anything done surpassed any previous experience even of this most tumultuous of parliamentary bodies.

For the subject nations had been for three years under a military despotism conducted with almost incredible cruelty. Many Czech and Jugoslav Deputies were in prison, and until Parliament met (the press being heavily censored) there was no outlet for their feelings. Parliament gave them an opportunity. In succession the Czech, Dr. Stransky; the Pole, Daszynski; the Slovene, Dr. Tresitch-Pavitchitch, rose in Parliament and told of thousands of their fellow-countrymen murdered with the utmost cruelty by German and Magyar military inquisitors. The Germans countered with howls of indignation over the Czechoslovak and Jugoslav troops in enemy armies; particularly the Kerensky offensive of last July, when most of the successes were won by Brusiloff's Czechoslovak soldiers, gave them huge material for wrath.

Daszynski's speech on June 14 had one important effect. When he said that 30,000 Poles had been hanged, a Pan German Deputy cried: "They haven't used enough rope." The acrimony roused by this led to the Poles, previously the allies of the Germans, refusing to vote for the war credits, and this brought about the downfall of the Clam-Martinic Ministry. Dr. von Seidler succeeded him, and has held office with the backing of a small minority ever since.

These dissensions, not alleviated by the Emperor's amnesty to the Czechoslovak and Jugoslav political prisoners in July, lasted till the Fall, and nothing was done. Federalization was as far away as ever; further, indeed, for the nationalities, exasperated by the resistance of Germans and Magyars, were drifting steadily toward a united demand for complete independence. But the controlling factor in these months was the course of events in Russia. It was apparent that the Russian Army had gone to pieces, that a demand for peace was getting the upper hand, and this strengthened the hands of the Pan Germans. The militarists in Berlin and Budapest were at their back, and the weak Emperor, apparently, was gradually manoeuvred out of his pacifist tendencies as he saw that on one flank, at least, there was no more danger.

Another menace was removed by the Italian defeat in October, and when the Bolsheviki overthrew Kerensky in early November the chance of a compromise was gone. In that month the Seidler Government announced that there would be no alteration of the seventeen provinces, which was a practical denial of any national autonomy to the Czechoslovaks, the Jugoslavs, the Ruthenians, and the Italians; and on Dec. 5 the Emperor told a delegation of (Austrian) Germans that "we shall remain masters in our own house." Since this frank declaration it has been evident that the Austrian nationalities can only be held down by force of arms.

For the moment the actual course of events was again determined by Russia. The Bolsheviki were suing for peace, and the Czechoslovaks and Jugoslavs, who had since the beginning of Parliament been practically in alliance, issued formal declarations that Count Czernin, the Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister, did not speak for the peoples. The Bolshevist watchword was the self-determination of nationalities; and they demanded that elected representatives of the nationalities of the Dual Monarchy be sent to Brest-Litovsk along with Czernin. This was refused; and on Jan. 6 the entire body of Czech Deputies, with the provincial Diets of the Czech provinces, met at Prague and demanded outright independence and complete separation from Austria for the democratic Czechoslovak State. They talked about the Austrian Government as the Continental Congress talked about George III. and his Ministers; and there was no longer any talk of autonomy under the Emperor.

Two weeks later the Jugoslavs made a very similar declaration, ratification of which has been obtained by an unofficial referendum in the Adriatic provinces. Their aspirations, as is generally known, include union with Serbia and Montenegro under the Karageorgevitch dynasty.

Meanwhile had come the peace with Russia and the Ukraine. The German interpretation of "no annexations and no indemnities" had infuriated democrats the world over, and this, together with the difficult food situation, inspired brief and ineffectual strikes in Austria. There were disorders in Bohemia, as there have been for three years; but in general the Czechoslovaks and Jugoslavs were holding back. A more important result of the Brest-Litovsk negotiations was the alienation of the Poles by the cession of Cholm to the Ukraine, and the alienation of the Ukrainians and their Ruthenian kinsmen in Austria when the Government, frightened by the Polish protest, decided to talk the matter over and perhaps to give the province back. The Ukrainians are now in substantial harmony with the Czechoslovaks and Jugoslavs.

The Poles for a moment seemed to be heading in the same direction; then, after once refusing to vote for the budget, they swallowed some promises from Seidler and reversed their action, the budget being passed by Polish and German votes with the other nationalities holding aloof. But since then the Poles have shifted again, and a large section of them is now demanding close alliance with the Czechs. This party, the National Democrats, is that which has been recognized in France, England, America, and Italy as the Polish National Committee, and its foreign representatives met in Rome in April with those of the Czechoslovak and Jugoslav national committees, and of the Italians and Rumanians in Austria, and came to an agreement which was very near to an alliance of the Slav nationalities of the Dual Monarchy under the benevolent assistance of Italy.

Since then there have been serious disorders in the Austro-Hungarian navy, 85 per cent. of whose sailors are Jugoslavs and no longer willing, as they were early in the war, to fight against the Italians. The nationalities of Austria are now looking to democratic Italy, where they once looked to autocratic Russia, as a liberator, and the prospect of a solid alliance of the Poles with the Czechslovaks and Jugoslavs is brighter every day.

These conditions of course made any accomplishments by the Austrian Parliament impossible. The suggestion of national autonomy for individuals and not regions—treating each nationality something like a church, as is done in Turkey—was laughed at; even the Austrian-German Socialists, who had once favored such a plan, now put themselves down as favoring national autonomy for the Slavs. Recently the Germans have apparently realized that no compromise is possible, and there has been talk of counterattacks on the nationalities by such methods as the establishment of a new province of "German Bohemia," of the unification of part of the Jugoslavs under Hungary, which has always allowed far less self-expression to its subject races than has Austria; and just now the cutting up of Bohemia into twelve districts to weaken the national movement.

So, there being no longer any need for the pretense of liberalism which seemed necessitated by the Russian revolution; the Austrian Emperor having been forced back from his mild views to a more characteristically Hapsburg reactionary attitude; and the Parliament, as it stood, being only a vehicle for the heated declamation of hatred for the Government, the Parliament was suppressed.

It was the liberal wave following the Russian revolution which in part occasioned its bringing together. It was the collapse of the Russian armies which enabled the militarists of Austria, Hungary, and Germany to force the Emperor and the moderates to abandon any idea of concession to the nationalities. It was the negotiations at Brest-Litovsk which finally convinced the most reluctant of the Slavs of Austria that Hapsburg as well as Hohenzollern was only making sport of them with talk of recognizing the aspirations of the people.

As has been said, men familiar with Austrian affairs think it likely that this may be the last Austrian Parliament. Whether this is true or not, it is likely to be the last one in which the prospect of a "new, rejuvenated Austria" will seriously come up. The privileged classes have the upper hand for the moment, but they have made implacable enemies out of moderate groups in the nationalities who might have been conciliated by an honest attempt at fair dealing. And the financial and economic situation of the Empire is very bad: Hungary still holds control of the food supply, and the disaffection among the troops of the Dual Monarchy is reported to be spreading more rapidly than ever.

It seems to be generally admitted now that there is no longer much prospect of Austria-Hungary making a separate peace. Those who once hoped for that, or many of them, are now talking of a revolution in Austria. Except in the unthinkable case of a German victory, such a revolution is almost sure to happen in the course of the next few years; but it will not be a revolution of "the people" against their masters. There is no "people" in Austria.

The revolution, when it comes, will be the rising of half a dozen oppressed nationalities, each united internally and all of them, according to present indications, acting together, against the dominant German bourgeoisie and the ruling classes who are men of no race in particular; a revolution which may or may not be aided by the Bolshevistically inclined Austrian-German Socialists. If the leaders of the nationalities called for it this revolution would break out tomorrow; but the leaders are working as hard as they can to hold it back. For if the Czechoslovaks and Jugoslavs rose now, when German artillery and machine guns could be poured into their lands, the rising would in all probability bring about nothing but a useless massacre of men, who can be of service to their peoples and humanity later on.

The rising will come, so far as anything at all can be predicted; but it should not, and probably will not, come very soon. It may come if the Russians revive and make serious resistance to the Austro-German armies; it will certainly come when the German armies in France are not only checked in their offensive, but suffer a serious loss of territory, war material, men, or prestige. The fate of the suppressed nationalities of Austria-Hungary, and of the Dual Monarchy as we know it today, will be decided in Picardy and Flanders.

WOMEN'S VOTES AND TIGER'S PURR

THE Tammany Tiger has stretched out his soft, caressing paw toward a goodly number of new voters. So far thirty-two women have been elected to the Executive Committee of "the Hall." There will be thirty-seven of them, the ladies are assured, but somehow five of the districts have not yet fallen in line.

Their duties? To sit at the feet of the Tiger and absorb the wisdom of his teaching, and incidentally to do his bidding.

They are to be permitted to go out into the byways and bring into the fold their sisters and their cousins and their neighbors and their aunts. The Tiger wants nothing in payment for this privilege—except their votes.

Way back in December, after the women of this State had got the vote, the Tiger decided that the said vote was not to be scorned. Therefore, neither were the ladies. Something had to be done and done quickly. The ladies were so emotional! One couldn't tell what they might do. They might, in the glory and the wonder of their new power, make fearful mistakes. They might, for one thing, think for themselves; they might refuse to think; they might—and this was the biggest thorn in the sides of the Sachems of Tammany—align themselves with the Socialists or the Republicans. Women are so queer!

A committee was forthwith appointed to decide how best and most artistically to serve the molasses and taffy, and preparations were made for the feast. An amendment was added to the constitution of Tammany Hall—it seems there is a constitution—to this effect: "We have with us today the ladies, gentlemen, and we must use them to the best advantage; therefore look your prettiest and act your best."

That was only the beginning, however. The Tiger was going to show the ladies that when he did a thing he did it in the right way. Again he called his committees together, and again they sat and pondered. This time they came out with the now vastly popular "fifty-fifty basis." The ladies were to be taken right into everything, "fifty-fifty." As a direct sequel to this several of the leaderships in some of the election districts were passed around, and several of the less bashful members of the female of the species helped themselves. There was rejoicing in the ranks of the new voters whose husbands, brothers, cousins, and uncles knew the well-worn path to East Fourteenth Street. The Tiger was pleased to see the way the ladies took his cues. So pleased, in fact, that he decided that he had nothing to lose and much to gain by handing out more. So he passed around one or two captaincies in some of the election districts.

Greater and more rejoicing! And, together with the rejoicing, a great abounding sense of gratitude. The Tiger was counting on that. Louder and louder he purred in his pleasure at the results of his work, and as a fitting climax of his greatheartedness, he decided to ask the ladies right into the heart of the inner shrine, the Executive Committee, the committee which makes the laws for the organization.

Formerly the committee was made up of members of the Assembly districts. It consisted of thirty-seven men who got together, smoked, talked, and planned the turning of the little wheels that made the Tammany machine go round. It was an intimate little game. But the Tiger has a great spirit and will sacrifice almost anything for a great cause—the cause of votes. The ladies came and were made to feel at home.

First, however, they were allowed to pass the vote on nurses' military rank—allowed to pass it unanimously, bless them, and then they received the enrollment blanks. In effect they were told to "go to it." They learned that the Tiger wanted to know, through yesterday's enrollment, just as a matter of interest, how many ladies he could count on to stroke his back. Knowing that the ladies had suddenly acquired a logical turn in mind, he gave them printed reasons for the need of their entering the ranks.

Nobody had ever before spoken to the ladies in this wise, and they were made very happy. There is nothing like happiness to make a woman work for the thing that is the cause of her happiness. "Fifty-fifty basis" was the password, and the new members resolved to prove that they were good sports. Besides, Tammany had promised to put them on the ballots in the coming primaries, fifty-fifty as before.

One of the important jobs he is holding out to them is that of committeeman. There are about 15,000 of these in the county of New York. Their duties are to get votes and votes and more votes. Their reward is the payment of an annual fee of $10 that goes toward the lubrication of Tammany machinery. Most of the men on the committee like to forget about it, but the ladies don't know this.

What's more, Tammany is going to give them a series of lectures for nothing—for nothing, if you please. The ladies are to be trained how to become poll clerks, ballot watchers, inspectors, and canvassers.

Certainly they are happy! Is not Tammany Hall the finest, noblest institution? They resent the assertions that they are going to purify politics. Tammany needs no purification. They have so long been curious about the things that have kept their husbands and friends busy at the club. Now they, too, can go to the club.

And the Tiger! He is lying low, purring softly and serenely into his two front paws.

WILL IT BE CAILLAUX AFTER BOLO AND DUVAL?

Trial of Latter and His Associates Further Enmeshed Former French Finance Minister—Scene in Court

WHAT Bolo Pacha tried to do, or feigned to do, but denied doing, Duval actually accomplished, according to the Paris papers containing full accounts of the latter's trial. Bolo played a lone hand and lost like a sportsman, Duval, it is said, with the whole Bonnet Rouge gang behind him, with the support, promised or received, of political personages, played a multiple, complicated hand and was a bad loser.

Bolo got $2,000,000 from the German Treasury and purchased an interest in Le Journal. He also got thousands from his old protector, Abbas Hilmi, ex-Khédive of Egypt. He said it was a case of "spoiling the Egyptians." The Paris court-martial thought otherwise. So the other day he was stood up against the bullet-scarred wall of Vincennes and shot.

With Duval it was different, except that since May 15 he has awaited the same fate. Duval made a success of Bolshism, where Bolo himself had failed. He did this as manager of the newspaper, Bonnet Rouge, which maligned the allies of France, spread pacifism in the trenches and was supported by German money via Switzerland. Once Duval was caught in transit with a check for $30,000 by the military police, which they had to return "on orders." His six chief associates in this traffic were tried with him. All save Leymarie, head of the secret police of the Ministry of the Interior, who procured Duval's passports and ordered the return of the check, are unimportant.

But with the end of the trial of the Bonnet Rouge gang, possibly even more interesting material awaits the pen of the Paris court reporter. Another trial in this complicated drama of intrigue began on May 22 when Sergeant Paix-Seailles and Captain Mathieu were arraigned charged with passing military documents on to the Bonnet Rouge. Then there will come the trial of Senator Humbert, who purchased an interest in Le Journal with the tainted money of Bolo—innocent he declares as to its origin. The Senate High Court will try M. Malvy, who as Minister of the Interior gave orders to Leymarie. Léon Daudet has openly accused him of treason and Maurice Barrès pointedly asked him in the Chamber of Deputies last July.

"When are you going to arrest the Bonnet Rouge gang?"

Malvy protested and resigned. The answer to the question was too big for the Painlevé Ministry, too big for the Ribot Ministry; for a complete answer, as everybody knew, would implicate the most powerful politician in France, Joseph Caillaux.

Then came Georges Clemenceau, who feared neither the gang nor its reputed master. So Caillaux, the great "boss" of political France, is now at the Santé Prison waiting to be tried for his life. He has several times been Finance Minister. When he was Premier, with the portfolio of Interior, with Malvy as Under Secretary, in 1911-12, his relations with Berlin are said to have been established. With advance news as to what Germany was going to do in the Agadir crisis of 1911, he and Malvy are alleged to have made thousands on the Exchange. After his wife shot M. Calmette, the editor of Le Figaro, "to save her husband's honor"—after the acquittal—Caillaux disappeared from public life until the Fall of 1916. Meanwhile, he had spread the "gospel" of a separate peace for France in Argentina and Italy—had even worked for the overthrow of the Government with a pacifist program.

In all this he sees no treason, merely the prerogative of a great statesman who knows what is best for his country. Helping Bolo and Duval, giving orders to Malvy, corresponding with Germans, was not treason for him, for he is Caillaux, and Caillaux cannot, in the very nature of things, commit treason. At the Bolo trial, at the Duval trial, when called as a witness, he tried with a grand gesture to impress all this on the Court. The Court cut short both speech and gesture.

His opportunity will come later, however, when he will have to fight for his life in the dock and against the only man in France who has ever dared to put him there.

It was said by the reporters at the Bolo trial that Bolo maintained his "distinguished air" till the very end and strolled out like a man of fashion. Word comes from Vincennes that he was the same before the firing squad. But it seems that Duval and his friends, when their trial began on April 29, had their fate already written on their faces. "And if looks could kill," a spectator told a reporter, "all the Judges would be dead." The tragic end of Bolo and the shadows of Vincennes seemed more and more to dominate the place with a funereal atmosphere as the trial proceeded. The game seemed lost even before the match began.

From all accounts it must have been a sinister spectacle for the audience—all the more so because the court was incomparably quieter and better-ordered than for the Bolo trial. The charm of Bolo's personality, with its flashes of pseudo-social distinction, was missing. It had deceived no one, but was charming to contemplate.

The editor of the Bonnet Rouge, the alleged Spanish swindler Vigo, alias Almereyda, was dead—killed by his own hand, or another's, in the Santé Prison—so Duval felt at liberty to speak quite freely about it. He said:

"The Bonnet Rouge is infamous, scandalous. I don't know what it was not in the eyes of M. Daudet, but there is one thing the Bonnet Rouge was not. It was not an illusion monger. (Reference to Daudet's paper, the Action Française.) The Censor saw all the articles. "If anything was published which had damaged national interests the Censor was responsible."

Lieutenant Mornet, for the prosecution, said: "Then if you go into a house and commit a theft the police are responsible, are they?"

"That is no analogy," said Duval, "for when I go to the Press Bureau I show my articles. The burglar does not show the police his jimmy before he breaks in."

Duval was asked to explain how, if before the war he was paid 300,000 francs by Marx of Mannheim (the alleged German paymaster) for his services in connection with the San Stefano Syndicate, he never mentioned the fact to a soul—not even to his wife, who then occupied a humble position in a laundry. Duval replied: "My wife was not ambitious. If she had known of this fortune she would have insisted upon my retiring from business altogether. I, on the contrary, am filled with ambition. If I ever earned half a million quickly, I wanted to turn it into a million. There was another reason for my silence. I wished to avoid paying taxes on the money."

On May 1 two of Duval's co-defendants were examined—Marion, the wine trade journalist and assistant manager of the Bonnet Rouge, who proudly asserted that he made $20,000 a year and hence had no need of German money, but who was ultimately sentenced to ten years at hard labor—and Joncla, a sort of overgrown office boy on the same paper, who received five years.

Marion blandly explained that he went to Spain with Joncla and Almereyda in the Summer of 1915, merely to open a race track at San Sebastian. He was then shown copies of documents on the Saloniki situation which, it is said, made their way to Germany via Spain and a German submarine. He identified these documents, one of which was a letter from General Sarrail to the Minister of War, another from the French Commander in Chief to General Sarrail, and another from the Premier to the French Minister at Athens. He added that he had not even read them, and said:

"But I have not conveyed copies of these documents to the enemy."

"You are not charged with that, for it has not been proved, but with making these documents known to third parties," he was told.

"I am certainly unlucky in my friends," said Marion. "Duval asks me to do something and I do it, and I am locked up. Almereyda asks me to copy something. I copy it, and they prosecute me."

Joncla, when put on the stand, strove hard to lift the gloom of the place. He said: "I am five feet ten inches myself, but at the Bonnet Rouge I was only six inches high. When I left for Spain Duval said to me: 'As you are going to Barcelona, send me some copy,' and he gave me 300 francs. And that's what they call a special mission! I would willingly give my life for France for nothing, but I would not betray her for such a price as 300 francs. It was most natural that when I reached Barcelona and failed, at the French Consulate there, to obtain material on the pro-German propaganda in Spain, that I should go to the German Consulate for the information."

"You went to the German Consulate and as soon as they saw your card with the name Bonnet Rouge on it they sent you to the pro-German paper 'Vérité,'" said Lieutenant Mornet. Joncla answered.

"No, excuse me, I did not send in my card."

"But you have stated that you had prepared an article which did not exclude the idea of a peace such as the Germans desire," continued Mornet.

"Purely a matter of tactics—of camouflage," explained Joncla. "It was to enable me to secure a favorable reception."

"For patriotic reasons?" asked the prosecutor.

"Precisely," replied Joncla.

The next day, Goldsky, the managing editor of the Bonnet Rouge, was called. He was later to be sentenced to eight years' hard labor, with military degradation, for he was a soldier.

"Why," he exclaimed, "once when I came back from the front I was shocked at the change I found in Almereyda's mode of living. Almereyda was living in grand style, with a motor car, and surrounded by a gang of ruffians; and I complained bitterly to him that none had been arrested. Now I am blamed for their work!"

Landau, who got eight years, was a reporter on the paper. According to reports of the trial in the Paris papers, he was the most amazing member of the whole gang. "He has a Mephistophelian face, with a high, receding forehead, a long, pointed nose, a little black mustache like a V drawn in black ink, and a microscopic, pointed chin." All the artists in court tried to draw him but despaired, they said, of doing justice to his silhouette.

He told the story of the visits he and Marion made to Caillaux at the latter's palatial home, 22 Rue Alphonse de Neuville. The great man had telephoned him: "Come in cabs, because my street is full of policemen." They also went out to see him at Mamers, Caillaux's country place. "It was," said Landau, "about starting the paper to be called the Tranchée Républicaine, with the aim of reconciling Caillaux with the great French bourgeoisie!"

It was evident to the reporters that a great gulf existed between Leymarie of the Interior Department police under Malvy, and the rest of the gang. He said:

"I was overwhelmed with work and yielded to the entreaties of Landau and Duval. I committed an imprudence in granting a passport to Duval to enable him to look after the business of the San Stefano Syndicate—nothing more."

"Imprudences cannot be admitted in wartime," said Lieutenant Mornet, "especially with those whose duty it is to set an example to others. Besides, you were not only a civil servant but a lawyer; you can hardly be forgiven for not having seen that, if the object of Duval's journey to Switzerland was to protect the interests of the San Stefano Syndicate, it still constituted an act of commerce with the enemy, since that syndicate was largely German."

Jean Leymarie was sentenced to two years in prison and fined 1,000 francs.

Vercasson received two years in prison, with a fine of 5,000 francs, which sentence was the only one suspended. He admitted acting as Duval's agent in bringing large sums of money from Switzerland, but without knowing their source or ultimate destination.

When it was announced that the great Caillaux would himself be called as a witness one reporter wrote: "After the valets, the master"—quoting from the "Duke's Motto."

When Caillaux finally entered the room, toward the end of the trial, his characteristic arrogance, forceful look and gesture, and unbroken spirit seemed to lift for a while the atmosphere of Vincennes, to drive away the ghost of Bolo Pacha. But soon the ominous influences were restored. Confined by the prosecution to a definite statement of fact—did the witness mention the name of Marx of Mannheim to Landau in September, 1916?—Caillaux could only make a denial; he was not allowed to make a speech. The spectators were disappointed. Still they will have a chance to hear him later before the same court fighting for his life.

Bolo, Duval—"after the valets, the master."

CHURCH OF ALL NATIONS BEGINS WORK IN BOSTON

THE recent dedication in Boston of the Collegiate Church of All Nations, Morgan Memorial, marked the realization of a new idea in religion, according to its sponsors.

The program of the Church of All Nations is interracial and interdenominational. Methodist, it is yet to be the centre of broad religious work. The plan comprehends a common training plant for the work of the several denominations of the city. It will be the first case in America of a genuine union of several denominations, like those unions which have met with such success in the foreign field, for the purpose of making a common impact on all races in a given area. Representatives of a dozen different religious sects will centre their work in this Church of All Nations, and, from it and through it, minister to Portuguese, Italians, Greeks, Armenians, Japanese, Russians, Germans, Swedes, Chinese, Syrians, and any other nationalities that may be found among the thousands that crowd the section of Boston where the church is. It is a new idea in evangelism.

The Church of All Nations is to be the home, beginning next Fall, of a school for the training of Christian leaders. The resources of Boston University, the New England Deaconess Association, and Morgan Memorial have been united to form a high-grade professional training school for workers. This school, born in the midst of the world's greatest tragedy, will seek to meet the present moral crisis in the nation. As a branch of Boston University, degrees will be granted and opportunities will also be offered for post-graduate work. There will also be special courses for those who are not prepared to take up college studies.

Dr. Helms, Superintendent of Morgan Memorial, hopes to make the pulpit of the Church of All Nations one of the most influential in Boston. An interdenominational staff of prominent ministers has been organized.

NO REST POSSIBLE.

Success Demands Continuous Exercise of Human Activity.

We were talking about a young man here in New York. Said one: "I'll tell you why that chap is such a wonder. The minute he winds up one big job he goes after another. He wastes no time patting himself on the back for past achievements. When he finishes putting something over he turns around and says to himself in regard to his own performance, 'Oh, that wasn't much. I have got to beat that. Now I must get to work and really do something.' Then he pitches into a fresh job as if he had never accomplished a thing in his life."

In other words, you have not only got to do good work, but you have got to repeat and keep on repeating if you want the world to continue to respect you.

The other day a famous author was telling me how he felt when his first story was accepted. He said that within a few minutes the thought flashed across his mind that he could not stop—but must go on. One good story must be followed by another and another and another—else his reputation would die and he would be humiliated. He said that the feeling was not exactly comfortable—that the prospect was in a way terrible. "Being successful," he said, "is not easy. The successful man advertises to the world that he can do certain things well—and he must go on making good or back off the map. It is a great sensation, a great experience—worth almost anything—but it isn't a snap."

It is the same way in business. The salesman who sets a high mark has to go right out and beat that mark or suffer by comparison with his own record. He can't sit down in a rocking chair and devote the rest of his life to receiving congratulations.

Have you ever sat in a restaurant and compared your job with that of a waiter? Try it some time. No matter what your work is, I am sure you will see the point if you watch the waiter and think how exactly his job typifies yours. Take, for example, my job—that of an editor. An editor's job is exactly like that of a waiter. He has to go and get something good and bring it in. And after he has brought it in he has to go right out and get something more and bring that in. The minute he sits down or stops to talk unnecessarily with the guests he ceases to give as good service as before. Then the guests who praised him a moment ago begin to growl. And so, almost immediately, he has turned from a good servant into a poor one.

This fits any line of human activity. A continuous performance is what is wanted. Nothing else counts.—Sid in American Magazine.

MORE AND BETTER CROPS WITH POWER CULTIVATOR

It Plows, Harrows, Hauls, as Well as Cultivates.

If you cultivate closely, thoroughly and frequently you will double and triple the quantity of your crops, to say nothing of much better crops. There is nothing ever produced that will enable a farmer or gardener to cultivate so thoroughly as the Beeman Garden Tractor. It is a practical tool, built by practical men. It does everything that you can do with the horse, only more of it. It will do more labor than ten men. The need for food will never be greater than now. Do your duty, get a Beeman and produce a full crop.

WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

RIALTO—"The Yellow Ticket," with Fannie Ward.

STRAND—"The Fair Pretender," with Madge Kennedy.

RIVOLI—"More Trouble," with Frank Keenan.

LYRIC—"Pershing's Crusaders," Government War Film.

BROADWAY—"A Soul for Sale," with Dorothy Phillips.

FORTY-FOURTH STREET—D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World."

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET—"The Biggest Show on Earth," with Enid Bennett, first half of week; "With Hearts of Steel," with Henry B. Walthall, last half of week.

"THE YELLOW TICKET," at the Rialto this week, is another presentation of a successful stage play on the screen. A. H. Woods produced the play with Florence Reed in the part played before the camera by Fannie Ward, that of a Jewish girl in Russia who accepted the "Yellow Ticket," the emblem of women of the underworld, in order to use it as a passport to her father's deathbed. How she was persecuted by the police and what dangers and difficulties she encountered in her efforts to break the bonds fastened on her by possession of the ticket, with her ultimate rescue by an American newspaper man, are told in the story. Milton Sills plays the part of the American newspaper man, taken on the stage by John Barrymore; Warner Oland has the rôle formerly filled by John Mason, and others in the screen production are Armand Kalisz, J. H. Gilmour, Anna Lehr, and Leon Barry.

The picture was produced by Astra and directed by William Clarke for Pathé.

Verdi's "Sicilian Vespers" will be played by the Rialto Orchestra as an overture, with Hugo Riesenfeld and Nat W. Finston conducting. Selections from "The Three Twins" will be given as a lighter orchestral number. Greek Evans, the Rialto's baritone, will sing "Six Feet Fathoms of Men," by Linn Seiler. "Winter Scenes in Southern France" will form the scenic portion of the program and "Wild Women and Tame Lions" will be the comedy. The Animated Magazine will contain a selection of timely subjects.

The Fair Pretender is an unscrupulously ambitious little typist, who enters capital-S Society by posing as the widow of one Captain Brown, supposedly killed in the aviation service of his country. Don Meredith, who is something of a social faker, sets out to win the pretender's hand and is making satisfactory progress when Captain Brown, not at all dead, suddenly appears and, as he has never been married, is pleased to find himself in the position of husband of such a fair young woman as the little typist. So the girl, after a terrifying escape from exposure, finds herself forced to keep up her pretense, until—

The picture is Madge Kennedy's latest Goldwyn production and no doubt will draw many of the actress' followers to the Strand.

Bob Bakker will be seen in pictures roping lions single-handed and will appear in person during the week to tell how he does it. Those who have seen any or all of the first four instalments of the Chester Outing Pictures will have high expectations of the fifth. "Pinks Up and Palms Down," James Montgomery Flagg's latest comedy in pictures and captions, "The Spoiled Girl," will be shown, and the Topical Review will include scenes of American soldiers in France and illustrations of the daily news.

The Strand's musical program will be: Betty Brown, recently of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, in "May Morning," by Denza, and "At Dawning," by Cadman; the theatre's orchestra playing "Prelude," a symphonic poem by Liszt, with Oscar Spirescu and Carl Edouarde conducting, and organ solos by Ralph H. Brigham and Herbert Sisson.

"More Trouble," at the Rivoli this week, is said to be unusual in that it is a comedy without comic characters, depending entirely upon situation for its fun. Frank Keenan takes the part of a wealthy manufacturer who begins to meet with incomprehensible trouble as soon as he takes his apparently mild and harmless son into his business. The scenario was adapted by Ouida Bergere from a story by Edgar Franklin. It was produced by the Anderson-Brunton Company, was directed by Ernest C. Warde, and bears the Pathé stamp.

The orchestra will play as its overture a fantasy from "I Pagliacci," with Hugo Riesenfeld and Erno Rapee conducting. Jeanne Gordon, contralto, will sing "O Divine Redeemer!" by Gounod, with violin obliggato by Alberto Bachman, 'cello obliggato by William Feder, and organ accompaniment by Arthur Depew. Schubert's "Moment Musical" will be played by the orchestra as accompaniment to a dance by Rita Lee, and the orchestra will also give selections from "It Happened in Nordland," by Victor Herbert. John Wenger has supplied special scenic settings for the solo numbers.

The Rivoli program also includes scenes in modern Mexico, the Animated Pictorial, and the Katzenjammer Kids in "Swat the Fly."

"Hearts of the World," which enters upon its ninth week at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, is now being shown in ten American cities, and will open at the Drury Lane in London on Wednesday, it is said.

"A Soul for Sale" continues for its second week at the Broadway Theatre, and to the program will be added singing by Oscar Gruber, a boy tenor, who has never appeared in New York.

The bill at Loew's New York Theatre and Roof this week is:

Monday, "The Midnight Madness," with Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford; Tuesday, "The Golden Goal," with Harry Morey; Wednesday and Thursday, "True Blue," with William Farnum; Friday, "A Pair of Sixes," with Taylor Holmes, and "High Stakes," with J. Barney Sherry; Saturday, "The Interloper," with Kitty Gordon; next Sunday, "Lend Me Your Name," with Harold Lockwood.

The Plaza Theatre this week will present:

Monday and Tuesday, "The Reason Why," with Clara Kimball Young, and a secret service film; Wednesday and Thursday, "Joan of Plattsburg," with Mabel Normand, and one of James Montgomery Flagg's comedies in the series, "Girls You All Know"; Friday and Saturday, "The Mysterious Client," with Irene Castle, and "Our Fighting Ally—the Tanks"; next Sunday, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation."

The Bronx Theatre will exhibit "Unclaimed Goods," with Vivian Martin, today, and follow it with a daily change of program.

The Brooklyn Museum will give its final exhibition of moving pictures for young people at 3:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Nat C. Goodwin, whose recent adventure in the field of moving pictures failed to bring him to the screen, but brought him instead into the Supreme Court as the successful plaintiff against the Mirror Films, Inc., in a suit for breach of contract, is to try his art before the camera again, according to an announcement by Aubrey M. Kennedy, whose new moving picture house, the Symphony Theatre, at Broadway and Ninety-fifth Street, is expected to open soon. Mr. Kennedy says that he will be a producer as well as an exhibitor, and that, starting on Monday, he will begin the manufacture of a series of two-reel comedies in which Mr. Goodwin is to be the star. The actor, whose fifth wife has started divorce proceedings against him, will appear first in "Married Again."

Mr. Kennedy has also announced that the first film shown in his theatre will be Oliver Morosco's "The Unchastened Woman," with Grace Valentine, based upon the stage play of the same name by Louis K. Anspacher.

A number of well-known guests attended a private showing of "Restitution," the Mena Film Company's first production, at Wurlitzer Hall, on Thursday evening. The film is an ambitious representation of a symbolical conception of human progress, beginning with Adam and continuing through the present to the future. The producers are planning its early exhibition.

Samuel Goldfish, head of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has announced that he will move his producing business to California, where he plans to erect a large studio. Thus one more of the big producing firms follows Horace Greeley's advice to young men.

The Educational Films Corporation announces that, beginning next month, it will release a series of twelve single-reel films entitled "Mexico Today." These are the work of George D. Wright, a young American who has lived in Mexico City for several years, and, in partnership with a native Mexican, has pictured aspects of the native life.

The General Film Company promises the release early next month of the Cinema Doll Comedies produced by the Emerald Motion Picture Company of Chicago.

Ernest Truex, juvenile actor, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear in a series of John Emerson-Anita Loos productions.

W. J. Stoermer has been appointed general sales manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, with offices at 126-130 West Forty-sixth Street.

Doris Kenyon is honorary Sergeant of the 122d Company, 70th Regiment, U. S. Coast Defense, and is arranging for a private showing of the first De Luxe picture, "The Street of Seven Stars," before the members of the company at Fort Hamilton.

Marcus Loew has booked "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," with Marion Davies, for exhibition in all of his theatres, it has been announced.

THE GOVERNMENT PRESENTS

WITH the Government taking over the operation of railroads, the building of steamships, and many other activities hitherto in the hands of private interests, the announcement that the authorities at Washington had gone into the moving-picture business caused little surprise and was generally received with favor. And now that the Government's first film, "Pershing's Crusaders," has been seen here, the popular verdict seems to be that, as producer and exhibitor, the United States has leaped up among the leaders. Of course, the Government enjoyed exclusive advantages in making and exhibiting its film, but, even so, it would have failed if skill in photography, judgment in choice of subjects, and intelligent design in general arrangement of pictures had not been employed to a high degree.

As was pointed out in the review of "Pershing's Crusaders," printed last Wednesday morning, following the first showing of the film at the Lyric Theatre, the chief achievement of the picture is the presentation of the war as a whole by showing glimpses of the nation's war-making from various important angles. Those who think that war is simply a matter of soldiery, for example, and conceive of sending soldiers against Germany as merely a matter of putting men into uniforms, giving them guns and ordering them overseas, will learn from the pictures that before there can be soldiers there must be millions of yards of cloth made into uniforms, thousands of acres of land turned into cantonments, tons and tons of food provided, and arrangements made for the selecting of the men best fitted to be soldiers, and for their long training after selection. They will grasp some idea of the magnitude of the shipping problem and what has been done to solve it; they will begin to appreciate what the manufacture of munitions means; they will see a dozen and one different branches of the preliminary work necessary before the nation can really go to war; and finally they will see American soldiers in France ready and fit to fight.

"Pershing's Crusaders" shows little of the actual fighting. Presumably that will come in the next chapter of "Following the Flag to France." The serial was conceived as a pictorial history of the country's participation in the war, and the first installment very properly begins at the beginning and takes spectators to the end of the first episode, which might be entitled "Getting Into the Struggle."

So those who want to appreciate the war, those who care to understand the business of America's war-making, should go to the Lyric Theatre for more information and instruction than they can get from newspaper dispatches and books unless they possess unusual powers of imagination and extraordinary facilities for reading.

Incidentally, those who like to lick the Kaiser by calling him hard names will also enjoy "Pershing's Crusaders." All of the well-known epithets, so frequently and so vigorously used by almost every one except the men doing the fighting and the best of the correspondents at the front, are employed explosively in the captions of the picture. One may go to the Lyric and beat the Kaiser to a frazzle—by applauding the ance.

Also, it is to be hoped that the foreign officers and civilians visiting in America who have been here long enough to become indulgent toward American bluster and buncombe will explain to the recent arrivals from their countries that, although some citizens of the United States seem incapable of thinking of their nation without swaggering and are utterly devoid of comic sense and good taste, America is really in the war to fight, not to talk, and appreciates what her allies have done, are doing, and could do without the assistance which she is earnestly striving to give. Unfortunately, a number of the quotations and cutins used in "Pershing's Crusaders" seem to have been composed by some one whose conception of his country suggests the school bully strutting among his fellow-pupils, who are too small or too much occupied with important matters to interfere with him. Visitors, of course, will smile at this new manifestation of American egotism, but one hopes that they will pardon it.

And may one find something of fault with the title and introduction of "Pershing's Crusaders"? Opinion as to the ethics of the early Crusaders may differ, but surely they grew out of and tended to perpetuate a system of militarism entirely out of harmony with the expressed ideals of America, and the explicit linking of the cause of the Allies to the spirit of crusades, in the minds of many, shows a sadly deficient appreciation of the purpose of the war as set forth by President Wilson.

A distinguishing feature of the exhibition at the Lyric is the decoration of the theatre with old French flags loaned from his private collection by Rodman Wanamaker.

News from Washington is to the effect that the Michigan War Preparedness Board and certain groups in California have registered protests in Congress against the Committee on Public Information's method of distributing "Pershing's Crusaders" through regular commercial and other channels without enlisting the co-operation of local bodies. The Michigan board maintains that the committee promised it the rights for all Government war films in the State, but ignored it in exhibiting the film in Detroit. According to report, exhibitors in the trouble centres are complaining that the film is shown in opposition to their interests and they blame New York men for attempting to control it. The matter, which is somewhat complicated, will probably be adjusted in Washington.

RELEASES AND RELAYS.

MAURICE TOURNEUR, who recently called attention to the fortieth anniversary of moving pictures and suggested that something be done to commemorate the services of Eadweard Muybridge, the inventor, now makes the definite proposal that a popular fund be collected for the erection of a Temple of the Screen in honor of Muybridge, in which the notable pictures and scenarios of each year, together with other material evidences of the development of moving pictures, may be kept. Mr. Tourneur suggests that the temple be built at the University of Pennsylvania, which is credited with financing Muybridge's experiments to the extent of $40,000. The necessary money could be most appropriately raised, Mr. Tourneur thinks, if the 17,000 picture theatres in the country, to which an estimated 15,000,000 people go every day, would ask each purchaser of a ticket to pay 1 cent extra for the fund during a period of three days.

Concerning the summary of the invention and development of moving pictures printed in THE TIMES last Sunday, Joseph Thwaites of West Fort Lee writes that Mr. Tourneur, who was quoted in the article in connection with Mr. Muybridge's work, was mistaken in one or two unessential points. Mr. Thwaites, who says that he was a close friend of Mr. Muybridge, places the taking of the first pictures of a moving horse on Governor Leland Stanford's ranch at Palo Alto, Cal., and not at Oakland. He adds that Governor Stanford, who, it will be remembered, was the founder of Leland Stanford Junior University and a United States Senator, paid all of the expenses of the work and subsequently took Mr. Muybridge to Paris, London, and Berlin, where the exhibition of his pictures attracted wide attention. Mr. Thwaites also corrects Mr. Tourneur's description of the manner in which the first pictures were taken, but makes no change in Mr. Tourneur's account that would be important to a nontechnical mind.

Emile Chautard, who is said to have played the part of Napoleon with Mme. Réjane in "Madame Sans Gene" some 1,600 times, and who was formerly general manager and stage director of the Réjane Theatre in Paris, has signed a long-term contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to stage Paramount and Artcraft pictures. His first production will be "Her Final Reckoning," with Pauline Frederick. M. Chautard entered the field of the screen some time ago, his recent pictures being "The House of Glass," with Clara Kimball Young; "Magda," and "Marionettes."

Al. Nathan, manager of the Broadway Theatre, announces that, beginning with "A Soul for Sale," shown for the first time last Sunday, the productions of the Universal Film Company will have their prerelease exhibition at the Broadway.

Concerning the Universal, it is announced that the company, in addition to continuing the production of multiple-reel features, will attempt to draw upon early experience in the moving-picture industry and turn out two-reel photoplays, the first of which will be "Play Straight or Fight," with Helen Gibson, M. K. Wilson, and G. Raymond Nye in the leading rôles.

D. W. Griffith is at work on another war picture to be produced under the Artcraft trade-mark. Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, George Siegmann, and others seen in "Hearts of the World" will have parts in it. Henry Walthall, who took the part of the Little Colonel in "The Birth of a Nation" is also in the cast.

The airdome proprietors, who, as has been pointed out here, are facing a serious situation because of the daylight saving system, are planning tentatively to substitute canvas for the sky as roofing for their theatres in order to make them dark enough for the showing of pictures at the hour when people go out seeking entertainment. The plans are tentative because there is some anti-fire law against tents which they fear will block them.

Screen Classics, it is announced, has obtained the moving picture rights to Henri Kistemaecker's "L'Occident" for Mme. Nazimova's next screen appearance.

CONSERVATION OF DOCTORS NECESSARY

Number is So Limited That There is Need of Restricting Their War Service—Teachers Could Help

By SAMUEL A. BROWN, M. D.,
Dean of New York University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College.

AMERICA has a much larger proportion of physicians than any other country in the world. The total number of them registered in the United States is 126,000, but not all of these are practicing. If this number were engaged in practice, there would be a doctor for about every 800 inhabitants.

France has one doctor for every 14,000 persons. In England the number is proportionately small compared with that in the United States. In Eastern Europe the number per capita is very small. Possibly, the chief reason why the United States has more doctors than any other country in the world is because the door is open more widely here than in foreign countries to all aspiring young men who seek to enter one of the three traditional learned professions—the church, medicine, and law.

No less for the United States than for countries which are not so amply provided with medical service, the war need of physicians is a grave problem. We have here two avenues of anticipated deficiency—the shortage for war and the shortage after the war. Information from the Surgeon General's Department is that there are but 76,000 doctors in this country available as to age, adaptability, and professional experience for war service.

At present about 17,000 physicians are attached to the American military forces. A few days ago it was announced from Washington that 12,000 more medical men were needed at once. Although twice the number of doctors will not be necessary for an army twice as large as the present force, yet the increase must be great, and if the United States intends to add to the size of its overseas army in the manner now contemplated, we shall soon draw upon our last available medical reserve for the war.

This will obviously create a great dislocation in the medical service at home, and a real deficiency which will be felt by the population.

The American medical profession must find an answer to the problem. Numerous as are the medical schools of the country, the number of men graduated from them at the present rate will make up only for the wastage from illness, strain, exhaustion and other causes. If the army should be raised to 5,000,000 men the deficiency would be serious.

We must conserve our medical men and keep up our medical schools. Already there is danger of a breakdown of our educational facilities for training physicians. Close to fifty members of the New York University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College Faculty have gone into the service. There are other members of the Faculty who tell me that they feel it their duty to go, but I do not think so. I have felt that I ought to go myself, but have been persuaded that the work which we are doing here is of such great importance to the country that this wish must be deferred for the time being.

Naturally, the patriotic feeling is as strong among the medical profession as among other classes of men, and it is difficult for doctors to escape the viewpoint that it is their duty to be actually ministering to soldiers in the field. Balanced against this is the sober judgment that it might be, in some cases, actually unpatriotic for physicians engaged in teaching positions to go into active service. If all the picked men who are especially trained to teach subjects in which they are qualified should elect to do their work in the army, instead of here, the consequences in a few years would be appalling to the country. Many men who are exceptionally proficient in practice do not possess the facility to teach which is indispensable in a medical college.

My belief is that some recognition of the medical teaching faculty should be announced by the Government. Teachers would not then feel that they are obliged to offer their services in the field unless they are called upon. The Government should take the faculties of approved medical schools into its service and assign them to teaching.

It may also be necessary to recall some of our retired doctors for work in civilian hospitals. Meanwhile, our medical colleges should endeavor to enroll and instruct the maximum number of well-qualified students that their schools will accommodate, keeping in mind the necessity of maintaining scholastic standards.

Besides the drain on the medical profession here, we have been compelled to give and have gladly given our assistance to the depleted ranks of the profession in Great Britain and France. We are now helping in British and French civilian hospitals as well as military hospitals. American physicians, with our engineers, were the first to go to the aid of our allies.

One reason for the depletion of the medical forces in England and France is that at the outbreak of the war doctors who felt it to be their duty to join the colors were permitted to enlist as private soldiers, and no adequate provision was made for continuing the medical schools. In addition to this, France threw her man power into the struggle without serious regard for the physical condition or occupations of the troops, thus increasing the number of diseased and decreasing the facilities for rendering assistance to them.

Fortunately, our Government has avoided this last mistake. Medical students of the draft age who are citizens are allowed to enlist in the Medical Enlisted Reserve Corps by signing a blank. This places them under the jurisdiction of the Surgeon General, and with his permission they continue their studies until they are graduated. They are also allowed one year of hospital service after graduation before being called into active service.

The medical student may not interpret his enrollment in the medical reserve forces as a release or an exemption. He is standing "At rest," and may at any time hear the command "Attention!"

Not the least important task which confronts the medical profession in this country will be that to be performed in the recuperative period after the war. The devastation that is now being wrought is far less in material wealth than in the wealth of man power. Many thousands, perhaps millions, will be broken in health, and the task of American physicians will be to save the national stock as far as possible from impairment during the transitional period. The Surgeon General's Department has made extensive plans for restoring to health and preparing for vocations men who are wrecked by wounds and disease in the war, and for this work a heavy drain will be made on the medical profession.

Both France and Canada have had to cope with the belated work of caring for their consumptive soldiers. A percentage of our men, perhaps a considerable number in such a vast army, may contract the malady. America cannot afford to allow it to spread. There again the doctor's service will be vital to the national welfare.

AWAKENING WAR SPIRIT

"I SAW a thing the other day," said the man who notices little things, "that was one small instance of how America's heart is warming up to the war. A fresh contingent of drafted men for the national army was coming to Manhattan on a ferryboat, just as they have been streaming across our encircling waters bound for Camp Upton ever since last Fall. I had seen a similar contingent start from that same place six or seven months ago. The difference between then and now was very marked.

"In the first case the relatives of the men were with them, making quite a crowd that laughed and chatted, evidently to keep its courage up and its tears back, and of course the local board had seen to it that there was a band to play stirring music all the time. There was very little general interest. But this new bunch of men the other day—I should think the whole population had come down to the ferry station to see them off. The people, men, women, and children, swarmed all over the place, and as the men marched aboard they left behind them a sea of waving hats and handkerchiefs, while the air was full of cheers and 'God-bless-yous.' The band played with snap and fervor and the calloused commuters, who ordinarily are not easily lured from the race to get a good seat on the ferryboat, crowded three deep along the rail of the gangway and around the stern deck, and stood up on stools to get a glimpse of the men and the scene, and forgot their morning papers long enough to give some cheers and do some waving themselves. And you could see on their faces the evidence of the thrill and the interest they were feeling, very different from the casual, momentary attention they had given to such a happening last Fall."

Wearing Old Clothes.

"How long," asks the inquisitive subscriber of Wharton, "must one wear his old clothes in order to help win the war?" It all depends upon where one lives and his environment. Personally, our rule is to wear them until the policeman tells us that we must either wear a linen duster, get our pants patched or stay at home.—Houston Post.

THE HIATUS BETWEEN SPRING AND SUMMER SHOWS

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

WHEN the white covers are slipped over the theatre seats the ushers and the audience may be reasonably certain that the off season has arrived, and when the actor is asked to consent to a cut in salary, he, too, is entitled to feel convinced. Probably in no line of business except the theatre is the actor expected to share the losses of his employer while not sharing in the profits. The reasons for this condition, of course, are obvious. A marked falling off in business frequently makes it necessary for a manager either to close his show or to reduce expenses, and in these circumstances the actor is generally willing to accept a lower emolument for the sake of the additional weeks' work. An actor turned loose in May has no place to go until August or September, (unless he is particularly fortunate,) and it is a long-recognized principle that something, even in the theatre, is better than nothing.

A cut in salary, of course, is accepted with the unwritten understanding that it shall not serve as a precedent when the Fall comes around again. An actor is jealous of nothing quite so much as of his salary, and a performer has frequently been known to remain idle for months rather than labor for a wage a few dollars below the figure which he regards as his salary. There is a comradeship among managers which makes an actor's salary more or less the knowledge of all, from which it will be seen that the actor's reluctance to accept a cut is frequently based upon sound common sense. Each recession, of course, makes an advance so much the more difficult to obtain the next time.

Several shows now running have already put salary cuts into effect. A young actor in one play, when approached on the subject about ten days ago, refused to accept a cut, but said that he would accommodate the management by leaving the show the following Saturday, thereby giving them the opportunity to replace him immediately with a less expensive performer. The offer, verbally made, was accepted with thanks, for two weeks' notice is customary when an actor withdraws from a company. Immediately before the matinee on Saturday, however, the actor astonished the management by declaring that he had thought the matter over, and had decided that he wanted two weeks notice.

While not denying that he had offered to leave immediately, the actor was obdurate, but it happened that one of those concerned in the management of the play was the author, a fellow of infinite invention. He informed the actor that he was entitled to his two weeks' notice, and that he could have them. He also informed him that he must transfer himself and his belongings immediately to a dressing room on the top floor, (the fourth or fifth,) and that he was to report for rehearsal at 9 o'clock the following morning. Both of these orders the actor was obliged under the terms of his contract to obey.

In vain he protested that it was impossible to move at that moment, as the hour for the matinee was at hand; the management at once offered to hold the curtain indefinitely. The actor explained that his belongings were scattered indiscriminately over the dressing room; the author expressed a willingness to assist in gathering them up. Thus cornered, and with the 2 o'clock rehearsal staring him in the face, the actor suffered another change of heart, and reinformed the management that he was willing to walk out that night. And so it happened.

It is when the slip covers go over the theatre chairs, also, that the leading players of the big hits are replaced by lesser lights, and betake themselves to the country for well-earned vacations. Barney Bernard and Alexander Carr stepped out of the cast of "Business Before Pleasure" after last night's performance, and will not be seen again in the piece until it begins its Chicago run in August. Meanwhile, they will be replaced tomorrow night by the Messrs. Teeke and Leonard, who played the parts during the long runs of the first two Potash entertainments in London. Their performances tomorrow will mark their first appearance in the rôles in New York.

Marjorie Rambeau, on the other hand, has already had her vacation—although by no means a voluntary one—and the Spring of the year finds her returning to the stage instead of leaving it. She made her appearance again in "Eyes of Youth" last Monday, and despite a brace and a cane she proved as popular as ever in the leading rôle—a popularity attested to by the increased receipts which followed immediately upon her return. "Eyes of Youth" is generally looked upon as an entertainment which will be highly popular on the road next season—so popular, in fact, that it may not be necessary to send Miss Rambeau out with it. Plans now under way call for Miss Rambeau to co-star with William Courtenay next year in the Roi Cooper Megrue war drama, "A Night at the Front"—a piece which will be renamed, incidentally. Miss Rambeau, like Laurette Taylor, is a player who has won her greatest success in New York; the road, except for a portion of the Far West which used to know her during her barnstorming days, has seen her not at all.

News of Leo Ditrichstein is to the effect that he is about to retire to his Stamford home for the Summer, there to finish a play for use next season. Some time ago the Rialto gossipers had it that Mr. Ditrichstein believed that his popularity warranted him in venturing forth on his own—i. e., sans management. Lou Tellegen blazed the way this season with "Blind Youth," a piece which has been enjoying a season of pleasant prosperity on the road after failing in New York. If Mr. Tellegen can do it, Mr. Ditrichstein is said to have opined, why not others who stand even higher with the populace? One of the prime reasons for Mr. Ditrichstein's desire for a change is said to be concerned with the curtailment of the New York run of "The King" by Cohan and Harris at a time when the star believed that its popularity warranted a further stay.

Speaking more directly of Lou Tellegen, he is the latest actor who seems likely to have a theatre named after him. The story is that negotiations are under way for one of the new Forty-eighth Street houses, the Vanderbilt or the Belmont, and that the beginning of the new season may find Mr. Tellegen playing in his own theatre, the Tellegen.

Despite the theatrical activities of George M. Cohan, two seasons have passed without a play from his pen—his recent revue not included—being produced in New York. Fully a year ago announcement was made that Mr. Cohan was dramatizing Gelett Burgess's story, "Mrs. Hope's Husband," a Saturday Evening Post tale of a couple of years ago. Nothing more has been heard of it all season, but it is now said that it is not dead, but sleeping. In other words, it will be tried out in the Fall, if not earlier, so that Broadway may not have to suffer another Cohanless season.

Maugre the absence of Cohan's name from the programs, however, it is probable that a good deal of his work has been seen and heard here recently. It is an open secret that George M. tinkers a trifle with such of the Cohan & Harris offerings as require tinkering, and the touch of his hand is frequently recognized in the finished product. It is interesting to note, in this connection, that Cohan never has set himself up as a great dramatic fixer—certainly not nearly to the degree to which a few other playwrights, men who wrote one big success, have done. Cohan does no work on a play unless the author specifically requests it, and accordingly numbers all the Cohan & Harris playwrights among his friends.

Jeanne Eagels's leading man in "Daddies," the comedy in which David Belasco is about to present her, will be Bruce McRae, who has just finished a two years' engagement in Miss Chatterton's "Come Out of the Kitchen." "Daddies," by the way, will be launched in Washington in two weeks.

The season is slowing down, but the war of the midnight roofs continues. The entrepreneurs of the Century Grove confidently expected that the Dolly Sisters and Johnny Dooley would add themselves to their entertainment on Wednesday night, but when the time came only the Dollys obliged, while Florenz Ziegfeld was caught wearing a smile. A number of new performers have been added to the Century show since it opened, George White and John McGowan among them. Mr. Ziegfeld, with each addition, unloosens the name of a new Frolic performer. Fanny Brice, to counterbalance the Dollys, will be added to the Ziegfeld show tomorrow night.

Half a dozen years ago there was a certain drama owned jointly by the Selwyns and William A. Brady, and at the dress rehearsal thereof Mr. Brady expressed some dissatisfaction. Archibald Selwyn, who is even more of a gambler than the average theatrical manager, offered Mr. Brady $10,000 for his interest, and the offer was accepted. The name of the piece was "Within the Law," and its career is stage history. Briefly, it put the firm of Selwyn & Co. on its feet.

Now it happens that "Rock-a-Bye Baby" was also owned jointly by the Selwyns and Mr. Brady, and that at the dress rehearsal Mr. Brady was not enthusiastic. The parallel circumstances so impressed Archibald Selwyn that he promptly invested $10,000 on the strength of them, again buying out Mr. Brady. While there is no inclination to maintain that "Rock-a-Bye Baby" will compare with "Within the Law" as a money maker, it is not improbable that the Selwyns will eventually come out at the long end of the transaction. And, even though the profits be inconsiderable, the accompanying sense of satisfaction is bound to be stupendous.

Some interesting statistics on "Turn to the Right!" came out of the Smith & Golden office during the week. The New York playgoer, naturally, does not bother his head greatly about last year's hit, but as a continuous source of revenue "Turn to the Right!" ranks with the first half dozen plays of the past decade. The original company, which stayed a year at the Gaiety, will have played twenty-three months without a break when it finishes a week in a local neighborhood house on Saturday night. The Chicago company ended its nineteenth consecutive month when it closed last night in Wheeling. The Australian company, which has played fifteen months, is still at work, and another company will finish a sixteen-swing around the cantonments next month. Two companies will be sent out again next season.

Several hitherto unheard of musical plays are beginning to be talked about. Edward Childs Carpenter, it is said, has turned librettist long enough to write a book for Victor Herbert, and the result is known as "The House That Jack Built." Fred Jackson's hilarious farce of several seasons ago, "A Full House," has been set to music, and will be produced under the name of "Go Slow," with May Vokes in her original rôle. Mitzi Hajos's new one, lately tried out, bears the name "Head Over Heels," and in it the star is said to indulge in several acrobatic stunts of a fredstone character. And George Broadhurst has one called "He Didn't Want to Do It," which seems to be slated for August production.

Not even yet, it appears, is "The Melting of Molly" destined to reach New York. This piece, first as a straight play and later as a musical show, has been one of the most persistently paragraphed pieces ever produced, but so far only the road has seen it. A fourth production of the play, starring Florence Nash, came to grief out of town a week ago, and repairs are once more the order of the day.

It looks as though another Barrymore—John this time—is about to come under the management of John D. Williams. The latter has made a star out of Lionel Barrymore, and John, too, will be a star next year. Mr. Williams, also, is one of the numerous managers who are not unwilling to be caught enticing Ethel Barrymore from the Frohman control, so there is at least an outside chance that he will have the entire family under his management in another year.

Nora Bayes will not be among the first contingent of players to go to France, as had been expected, but will make a trip around the cantonments instead. The change of plans, according to the announcement, was made "at the request of President Wilson," which indicates that the President of the United States finds time to attend to a lot of things.

As to Miss Bayes's future, it seems probable, although President Wilson has not said anything about it as yet, that she will be starred in a musical piece under the management of H. H. Frazee.

IN THE MAILBAG.

To the Dramatic Editor:

In your article "The One-act Play" in THE TIMES, Sunday, May 19, you give the Washington Square Players credit for seven plays by four dramatists. Five of these plays are Susan Glaspell's "Trifles" and "Suppressed Desires," Eugene O'Neill's "Bound East for Cardiff," "In the Zone," and "Ile." Four of these were first produced by the Provincetown Players. Miss Glaspell and Mr. O'Neill are Provincetown Players. They are not Washington Square Players. "Trifles" was accepted by the Provincetown Players the night it was finished, Miss Glaspell being late to the meeting in order to finish the play. "Bound East for Cardiff," first played by the Provincetown Players, has never been played by the Washington Square Players. "Ile," first played by the Provincetown Players, has never been played by the Washington Square Players, "Suppressed Desires," written by Susan Glaspell and myself, was produced four times by the Provincetown Players and perhaps a hundred times by little theatres throughout the country before it was put on by the Washington Square Players.

I have no desire to minimize the work of the Washington Square Players, and I am quite sure that they do not care to rest four-sevenths of their claim to recognition upon the achievements of another and friendly group of playwrights.

I trust that for the sake of these corrections as to facts you will give this note publicity.

GEORGE CRAM COOK.
Director of the Provincetown Players.

Mr. Cook's statement is of interest as a summary of work achieved by the Provincetown Players, but as a comment on the article in question it is misleading. That was concerned with "the new artistic personalities" which the Washington Square Players "have introduced to us." The performances in Macdougal Street are private. To the general public the primary means of making the acquaintance of the work of Miss Glaspell and Mr. O'Neill lay in the productions of the Washington Square Players. Many of us have been glad to extend that acquaintance by reading the published texts of other plays.

The assumption that the Washington Square Players' "claim to recognition" rests in the few plays I named is even more misleading. In addition to many other plays of great interest from American playwrights, they have produced leading works by Ibsen, Shaw, Maeterlinck, and Andrieff—an achievement unapproached by any of our other little theatres.

In one respect the article was inaccurate. Owing to a temporary lapse of memory I thought that Mr. O'Neill's "Ile" had been produced by the Washington Square Players and dropped from their bill together with "Salome." When I realized the error it was too late to correct the proof. There is fortunately no reason for saying that it "seems to have found less favor with the public" than its author's other plays. It is still in the bill at the Greenwich Village Theatre.

WHO IS SUSAN GLASPELL?

OF all the playwrights connected with the little theatre movement in this city, probably none of them is more closely affiliated therewith than Susan Glaspell, (pronounced, incidentally, with the stress not upon the penult, but the ultimate.) There are four major little theatres in New York, and Susan Glaspell is, speaking off-hand, the only playwright who has had plays produced in all four of them. She began with the Provincetown Players, but, although she is still a Provincetowner, they could not hold her entirely for themselves. The Washington Square Players have done her plays at the Comedy, the Greenwich Village Players have done them at the Greenwich Village, (the most recent of them, "Woman's Honor," was produced at the Greenwich last Monday,) and the Neighborhood Players have done them at the Neighborhood.

Miss Glaspell is generally regarded as one of the two or three foremost and most promising contemporaneous writers of the one-act play. It is only a matter of two years since she first turned her attention to plays; prior to that she had already become widely known as a writer of short stories and novels. Before even that she was a newspaper woman. She worked first on a newspaper in Des Moines, (Iowa was her birthplace,) and while on this job she began her magazine work, writing a number of short stories of Iowa political life. Later she studied at the University of Chicago, and then spent a year or so in Paris with Lucy Huffaker, sending back articles to American newspaper syndicates.

Miss Glaspell first became known in the writing world eight years ago through her novel, "The Glory of the Conquered"—a best seller, by the way. This volume was followed by two books which were generally regarded as finer and deeper, but which were not so successful—"The Visioning" and "Fidelity." Whatever the fate of her novels, however, it is certain that at least two of her short stories will live, for this number—"Poor Ed" and "The Hearing Ear"—are included in "Best Short Stories of 1917."

As for her turning playwright, a few lines in a recent letter of Miss Glaspell's from Provincetown explain it. "I am a novelist and short-story writer," she declared, "who wouldn't have thought of writing a play if it hadn't been for the Provincetown Players. I wrote 'Trifles' because we had rented the Wharf Theatre in Provincetown, and I found it was such good fun that I went on." Prior to doing "Trifles," however, Miss Glaspell had written "Suppressed Desires" in collaboration with her husband, George Cram Cook. This piece, a satire on psycho-analysis, now threatens to become a comedy classic, but the experimental theatres of the day rejected it one at a time. The rejection proved a fortunate circumstance, for it was the turning down of this piece which led Miss Glaspell, Mr. Cook, Eugene O'Neill, and a number of other writers to found a theatre experimental enough to try anything once—viz., the Provincetown Players, and had it not been for the Provincetowners Miss Glaspell would have written no more plays.

It was for the Wharf Theatre in Provincetown that Miss Glaspell subsequently wrote not only "Trifles," but "The People," "Close the Book," "The Outside," and "Woman's Honor." All but one of these—the last—had its first performance at the hands of the Provincetowners, and generally with Susan Glaspell as a member of the cast.

THE "OUT THERE" FIGURES.

The three weeks' swing around the country which the all-star "Out There" aggregation is undertaking under Red Cross auspices is resulting in box-office receipts which bid fair to stand for all time. Strangely enough, New York, with its great population, did something less than was expected of it in a financial way, although the receipts for the three performances here, inclusive of the results of a general appeal on the opening night, were in the neighborhood of $70,000. It has been the other cities, however, which have put the tour over the top. Boston, for example, paid $65,000 to see a single performance last Tuesday night, the autographed program bringing nearly $13,000.

On Monday night Providence, George M. Cohan's town, paid $22,000; on Wednesday New Haven gave $32,000; on Thursday Buffalo gave $38,000. These figures, with Boston's $65,000, brought the figures for the week to about $159,000, inclusive of some odd dollars at each performance. The last three shows of the week were given in Chicago, and indications on Friday afternoon were that the receipts of the two days would reach $100,000. Adding this to the aforesaid $159,000, one reached the stupendous total of $259,000 in a week, a figure which not even Mr. Ziegfeld's celebrated "Follies" seems likely to touch. The first week, including the New York performances, brought in $176,000; the total for the two weeks, accordingly, is about $435,000.

There remain eight performances in other cities, and as the auction sale in each place runs in the neighborhood of $20,000, with Pittsburgh paying over $100,000, it is reasonable to expect another $250,000. In which event the three weeks will profit the Red Cross to the extent of nearly $700,000, a sum not to be ignored even in these days of billions.

A peculiar tale of the ways of the public filtered back to New York during the week from Boston. On the day of the "Out There" performance in that city a woman approached the box office and inquired rather timidly if there were any $2 seats to be had. The box office man replied in the negative.

"Well, what are the cheapest seats?" was the next question.

"The house is sold out completely, with the exception of one box," was the answer. "That was sold for $500 and returned, and we're trying to get a thousand for it now."

"I'll take it," she said.

Boston, according to the story, tried vainly to figure it out, but a tenable theory appears to be that the woman was determined to impress a box office man for once in her life, and hang the cost!

ANOTHER THEATRE PROBLEM

It is not true, declare Cohan and Harris, that "A Tailor-Made Man" is about to be moved out of the Cohan and Harris Theatre to make room for "Going Up," which piece, in turn, is not to be moved out of the Liberty Theatre to make room for "The Rainbow Girl." It is certain, however, that "The Rainbow Girl" must be moved out of the New Amsterdam Theatre to make room for the "Follies," which brings up the question of where "The Rainbow Girl" is to go. All of the Klaw and Erlanger theatres are now occupied, except one or two which are not suitable for musical productions. On the other hand, "The Rainbow Girl" is doing too well not to be housed somewhere, and it is axiomatic, or almost that, that it cannot remain in the New Amsterdam Theatre with the "Follies."

THE NEW PLAYS

ONLY the intervention of the United States Navy will save the coming week from being an utter loss theatrically. It is too late for Spring productions and a trifle too early for most of the Summer shows; wherefore the sole event of the week will be the musical comedy with which the Pelham boys will regale the metropolis.

BIFF! BANG!—Thursday night at the Century Theatre.

The army and the Ambulance Corps have already shown New York that the ability to put on a good show is by no means incompatible with uniformed life, and the naval recruits at Pelham will endeavor to demonstrate the same thing at the Century this week. Their musical comedy is called "Biff! Bang!" and it will be revealed to New York on Thursday night, following a performance for Pelhamites in the afternoon.

The piece is a semi-professional entertainment, the company including Jack Pickford, Robert B. Mantell, Jr., and Joe Fields, the two last-named being professional by inheritance, at all events. The music is by William Schroeder, a navy bandmaster who is not unknown to Broadway, and the lyrics and rest of it have been designed by Philip Dunning, Robert Cohen, and William Israel. About 200 sailors will make up the cast.

Ten performances, exclusive of a professional matinée, will be given at the Century.

One of the most ambitious of the Red Cross theatrical events will take place at the Century tonight, when a long list of celebrities will appear—and positively appear—to help along the cause. Reading from left to right, the list includes Weber and Fields, Clifton Crawford, Al Jolson, Fred Stone, Rock and White, Dorothy Jardon, Six Brown Brothers, Carl Randall and Vivienne Segal, Nat C. Goodwin, McIntyre and Heath, Fannie Brice, Leo Carillo, Will Rogers, Eddie Cantor, Florence Moore, Conroy and Le Maire, Anna Wheaton and Harry Carroll, Ray Cox and Will Morrissey, Ann Pennington, George White, Doyle and Dixon, Louise Dresser, Harry Fox, Three Dooleys, Frank Craven and Edith Day, Fay Bainter, Harry Clarke, Janet Velie, and the chorus of "The Kiss Burglar"; Bert Leslie, Sophie Tucker, Jane and Katherine Lee, Adele Rowland, Nan Halperin, Gus Edwards and girls, Constance Binney, Private Irving Berlin, 260 Junior Naval Reserve Boys and Boy Scouts, and the 7th Regiment Band.

Another Red Cross performance tonight will be given at the Winter Garden, when the receipts of the regular Sunday night show—although this one will be something more than regular—will be for the cause. Those who will appear include Al Jolson, Clifford Crawford, Eugene and Willie Howard, William Hodge, John Charles Thomas, Peggy Wood, Charles Purcell, and William Norris.

Enrico Caruso will sing at the Metropolitan Opera House tomorrow evening in the last of the great Red Cross benefits given under the auspices of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team. The Italian tenor will appear midway in a program of twenty numbers, giving selections from his favorite opera rôles, and at the close he will join with Antonio Scotti in the famous duet from "Forza del Destino." Sophie Brasian will sing "The Star-Spangled Banner" and Leon Rothier "The Marseillaise." Harold Bauer, pianist, and Eddy Brown, violinist, will appear as soloists, while Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Walter Damrosch and others will conduct the orchestra. The Japanese prima donna, Tamaki Miura, will sing an air from "Madama Butterfly," and Anna Fitziu and Riccardo Stracciari will represent the Chicago Opera Company. Among the Metropolitan volunteers are also Frances Alda, Claudia Muzio, Pasquale Amato, Andreas de Segurola, Adamo Didur, and José Mardones.

Something of a novelty will be offered at the Park Theatre tonight, when the stage hands who have been reading "Seven Days Leave" for the last five months will undertake to give a performance of the piece, playing all rôles. The Stage Women's War Relief, it is announced, will profit by the production even if nobody else does. Grace La Rue will be on hand to sing the official S. W. W. R. song between the acts.

The vaudeville circuit will formally recognize the coming of the off-season by throwing open the doors of the New Brighton Theatre tomorrow afternoon. No announcement of closing is forthcoming as yet from any of the seven or eight other two-a-day houses scattered around the greater city.

A British Empire Day celebration, scheduled for Carnegie Hall tonight, will enlist the services of Mme. Alda, Anna Fitziu, Regina Victorino, Julia Marlowe, Ada May Weeks, Alice Brady, E. H. Sothern, Clifton Crawford, and others. There will be no admission charge except for persons desiring boxes.

DOROTHY DICKSON AND THE DANCE

In the light of the large number of personable young women who annually enter the theatrical profession, and in consideration of the further fact that a certain facility at so-called ballroom dancing is one of the first things demanded of the modern actress, it is passing strange that there are not half a dozen actresses who have made names for themselves in the field of ballroom dancing. It was Mr. and Mrs. Castle, of course, who first popularized ballroom dancing on the stage, but among the hundreds of young women who followed in Mrs. Castle's footsteps there were not more than two or three who acquired any great reputation. Foremost among these, perhaps, was Joan Sawyer.

The reason for this condition of affairs, of course, is that success as a ballroom dancer on the stage required a variety of talents. In addition to being able to dance well and look pretty, it was necessary that the danseuse should be possessed of personality and a knack at wearing clothes; it was also advisable to be something of an actress if one would enter revues, and it did no harm to possess a little voice, although it is stage history that Mrs. Castle succeeded without any.

With the dying down of the dancing craze there was no call for new dancing personalities for a couple of years. Last season, however, Dorothy Dickson loomed on the horizon and, with her partner, Carl Hyson, definitely established herself as Mrs. Castle's successor. Last Thursday night at the Astor she scored the individual success of the evening in "Rock-a-Bye Baby"—a success so pronounced, by the way, that the management at once hastened to provide her with another dancing number. Today Miss Dickson's only rival for the premier dancing honors in her field is Evelyn Cavanagh of "The Kiss Burglar." Miss Cavanagh is also an exponent of the Castle school of dancing, but in the course of her brief residence in New York she has not yet had time to impress her personality upon playgoers.

A year and a half ago Dorothy Dickson never had been on the stage, and had no thought of ever going. With her husband, Carl Hyson, she lived in Chicago, where Mr. Hyson concerned himself with so undancelike a profession as selling real estate. But now and then, of course, they danced a little. A chance wager with a friend was the cause of their turning professional—a bet as to whether they could compete with professional dancers on even terms. They tried it in Peoria, found that the public seemed to like them, and returned to Chicago to dance in a gilded hotel.

There they were discovered almost immediately by one of the Elliott, Comstock & Gest scouts, and their engagement to dance in "Oh, Boy!" followed. "Oh, Boy!" was one of those entertainments which were rushed to the stage in a week or two; accordingly the Hysons, only a month or so after their Peoria, tryout made their New York début. This was about the beginning of last season.

Florenz Ziegfeld promptly thought so much of them that he engaged them to dance in the Midnight Frolic, and a little later the management of the Biltmore acquired them for a nightly dance. For several months they appeared in all three places nightly—in "Oh, Boy!" at about 10 o'clock, at the Biltmore at 10:45, and on the New Amsterdam Roof at 12:30. Following this strenuous program they went to their home in Great Neck, all of which made for a full evening.

This season they made a brief appearance in the late and unlamented "Girl o' Mine," which proved beyond the power of even expert dancing to save, and at present in "Rock-a-Bye Baby" they are given considerably more to do than is the customary lot of the dancer. Miss Dickson, in addition to contributing a trio of wildly applauded dances, sings a number as well, and exhibits, all in all, a virtuosity which seems likely to keep her greatly in demand by both managers and public as long as musical shows continue to be produced.

GERMAN CRUELTIES IN PRISON CAMPS

Sworn Statements Tell How British Prisoners Are Mistreated—Times Man Talks With Survivors.

ADDITIONAL evidence of brutalities practiced by German custodians upon British prisoners has been obtained by a correspondent of The New York Times at Mastricht, Holland. He talked with officers and men among a contingent of 250 on their arrival from Germany in a Red Cross train. As to the cruelties they and others suffered, however, he relied upon sworn statements, prepared for official British consideration.

German newspapers boast that there are 2,000,000 prisoners of war in the country. They are British, Russian, Serbian, Italian, Rumanian, Czech, and American; but the British are the most heartily hated, according to the accounts the reporter obtained. English prisoners must be put under armed guard in passing through villages to protect them from mob wrath in the streets. Toward French prisoners the attitude is kindly, and fifty or more are said to escape sometimes in a single day.

The accounts of suffering and ill-treatment in German prison camps presented here are from the sworn statements made for the United States and British Ministers at The Hague. One affidavit concerns the death of Private Barry of the Scots Guards at Sennelager. Sergeant Harvey James Jeffery is the witness. His statement tells how he was sent to Block 2 of that compound, where sixty-two men were held, and continues:

"At about 5 o'clock, on the morning of Jan. 18, 1918, a German soldier entered the room and ordered eight men to draw the coffee from the camp, which is about 300 yards away from the receiving compound. Seven prisoners of war complied with the order, but as the English cannot drink the German coffee, no Englishman went forward to draw the coffee for the twelve Englishmen there.

"The German soldier ordered Private Barry, Scots Guards, to fetch the coffee. Private Barry said that they could not drink the coffee. He ordered him a second time and Private Barry again refused.

"The sentry then attempted to strike Private Barry with the butt of his rifle. Private Barry pushed the rifle down with his two hands; the sentry then ordered the remainder of the prisoners to the other side of the room, then, turning about, he walked to the door, a distance of about ten paces.

"On turning about again there were two Frenchmen standing in front of Private Barry in the line of fire. He ordered these two Frenchmen to get over to the left. He threw open his overcoat and came to the aim. As the aim was not comfortable he cleared his shoulder of the overcoat. He then came to the aim a second time and fired, hitting Private Barry in the left side; he died in about four minutes.

"The twelve British witnesses, whose names and regiments are in my possession, are prepared to swear that this action did not take place in the heat of the moment, but was absolutely deliberate on the part of the German soldier. At about 4:15 P. M., I myself went to this room to take a bath, and I saw Private Barry's body lying on the floor as it had fallen, with the exception that it was then covered with a greatcoat.

"One eyewitness reconstructed the whole action for me. I, myself, paced the distance from where Private Barry fell to the doorway from where the German soldier had fired; the distance was ten paces."

Sergeant Robert Johnson, Company No. 2, 1st Coldstream Guards, testified as to the death of another man in his unit, and his statement is corroborated by Richard Sturges, another witness. Sergeant Johnson says.

"At Sneidermuhl, (Prussia,) on Nov. 4, 1914, I was standing on parade next to Private Bolam, No. 2 Company, 1st Coldstream Guards, close by the gate of No. 1 lager, opposite No. 1 cookhouse. We were supposed to be receiving our bread. In point of fact, we did not receive our bread on that day.

"A German sentry, armed with rifle and fixed bayonet, said something, which neither myself nor Private Bolam understood, and rushed at Private Bolam and struck him. Private Bolam then ran away. The lager was searched, and eventually Private Bolam was found in a hole in the ground.

"I should like to explain here that at that time we were only quartered in holes dug in the ground, for we had no huts in our lager, and we had to make ourselves as comfortable as we could in the open and in holes which we ourselves scooped out in the ground.

"A barrel was fetched in the lager by order of the German Adjutant, (whose name I never knew, but his name is well known to the representative of the American Embassy at Berlin.) Private Bolam was then stripped to the waist and placed across the barrel by about six German soldiers, among whom were some Feldwebels. Each of them had a wooden post in his hand; they were evidently posts which were being used to place barbed wire round the camp. They struck Private Bolam over the head, bare back, and the body with these posts. He cried for mercy, but this punishment went on for at least ten minutes.

"Private Bolam was practically unconscious and had to be carried to a hut outside the lager, where the Russian cooks stopped. I did not see him again for about three days, when I was ordered to attend his court-martial as evidence, accompanied by Drill Sergeant Hogan, Grenadier Guards, who was also a witness for Private Bolam's defense. The result of the court-martial was that Private Bolam was acquitted. Mr. Jackson, the American representative, subsequently told me that their embassy had particulars of this court-martial.

"After the court-martial Private Bolam returned to our lager, where he remained until he was suddenly taken sick about a month later, but during the whole of this time his head and face were swollen from the brutal treatment of Nov. 4, 1914, and he was suffering very severely all the time. I saw or heard nothing more of him for about three weeks, when I was informed by a German, (Lieutenant Bond,) who was Lager Adjutant, that Private Bolam was dead.

"No British N. C. O. or man was allowed to see Private Bolam or attend his funeral. I personally reported this case to Mr. Jackson of the American Embassy about August, 1915, the first visit any neutral representative paid to our camp. Although typhus was raging at the time I am prepared to swear that Private Bolam died from the result of his brutal treatment and not from any disease.

"I would further add that after Private Bolam had been carried out of the lager he was tied to a post, about twenty yards from the gate, with wire round his chest, middle, and ankles. He was in a fainting condition. A German officer (barrack inspector) came up to Private Bolam and struck him with his sword, which was in its scabbard, on his legs and chest, afterward he spat at Private Bolam and called him 'Englische schweine.'"

Richard Sturges, who witnessed that incident, also swears to the following:

"About Nov. 7, 1914, I stood on counting parade next to Private Stimpson, No. 2 Company, 1st Coldstream Guards. We were formed up in a narrow alleyway between the outer and inner wires of the lager. At about 8 A. M. the German Camp Adjutant (his name I have never been able to ascertain, but it is well known to the American Embassy) came down the ranks. When this officer had passed the Russians he came to the British prisoners of war and the left-hand man of the leading section of fours and nearest to the officer was Private Stimpson. I was the left-hand man of the second section of fours and was stood immediately behind Private Stimpson. The German Camp Adjutant drew his sword, said 'Englische schweine' and thrust his sword into Private Stimpson's left buttock. It penetrated at least five inches. He bled profusely, but we managed to support him.

"At this time there was no medical attendance of any sort in the camp, but we bandaged him as best we could and looked after him for about a fortnight. He suffered severely during this time and could barely hobble about. We were then moved to No. 2 Lager and quartered in huts. Private Stimpson lay on a mattress in my hut for about another fortnight, when he became paralyzed from his hips down. He was carried to hospital by Corporal Guy, (now in England,) Private Kirkham, and other Coldstreamers.

"I never saw Private Stimpson again. Soon after this I fell ill of typhus myself, and on recovery made inquiries of Private Stimpson. A German, (Lieutenant Bond) told me about April, 1915, that Private Stimpson had been moved to a hospital at Berlin, but, after further inquiries, from England (through the American Embassy) we were informed that he had died on or about Jan. 6, 1915, from typhus. As Private Stimpson was only carried to hospital by our men about Dec. 29, 1914, paralyzed, I have no hesitation whatever in swearing that this statement is absolutely untrue and that Private Stimpson died from the result of the wound inflicted by the German Camp Adjutant."

Corporal Richard Groombridge, 1st Life Guards, in the course of an affidavit dealing with various happenings in Langensalza Camp, (Prussian Saxony,) throws this light on hospital conditions:

"There were about forty deaths in Langensalza between May and October, 1917, all from neglected wounds; two-thirds were from gangrene. For over eighteen months Corporal Dibben, 1st Hants, was the only Englishman allowed in the Lazarett, so he has a very intimate knowledge of all that went on in it. The Germans would allow no other British soldier in to act as hospital orderly; they said there were sufficient Russians and French.

"Private Howe, Australian Imperial Forces, and Sergeant Hultson, 19th Battalion Northumberland Fusiliers, both wounded in the spine and bedridden cases, went to Aachen, at the end of 1916, for exchange. They were returned to Langensalza in April, 1917, for the same reason. They both died in October, 1917."

(Evidence on this point: Sergeant D. A. Kirk, 1st West Yorks, Regiment. Corporal Dibben adds: "They died from neglect; they were hardly ever washed, and had filthy beds.")

"Private Sheriff, Australian Imperial Forces, died in the barrack room in Langensalza in October, 1917, after being returned a few days from working close behind the lines in France, with a running wound in his thigh. This was carrying grenades into the support trenches. The deceased made this statement to Corporal Dibben just before he died. The Corporal saw the certificate of the post-mortem, which showed cause of death as gangrene.

"Private Metthews, 1st Bedfords, arrived from the front on May 22, 1917, with shrapnel wound in the left ankle, otherwise in good health. After being in hospital a few days it was found necessary to operate, as the ankle was getting very bad. The operation was performed by Dr. Dahle, but was not a success. The patient got very weak, the attention of the doctor was repeatedly called to him, but no nourishment was provided. Amputation was ordered, but this was postponed for a week, during which time the patient had only been dressed once. The attention of the doctor was again called, as the man was gradually getting weaker. The doctor paid his visit, but nothing was done. About four hours after the doctor's visit Private Matthews died." (Witness: Corporal Dibben, 1st Hants Regiment.)

Several other similar cases are described in Corporal Groombridge's statement.

Sergeant D. A. Kirk, 1st West Yorkshire Regiment, on March 11, 1918, also gave a statement about Langensalza Camp, in which he said:

"The sanitary arrangements, in particular, are very bad. The barrack rooms in the Winter and during wet weather are deep in mud, and it is practically impossible to keep them clean.

"Wounded men are placed in separate wards, which are badly built, and during wet weather the rain pours through, and in some cases on to the beds of the patients. The ordinary sick cases are in wards which are merely tents with boarded sides and are very damp and cold. During the first fortnight in February, 1918, forty-one badly wounded men arrived at Merxlebem Station, (the siding for the camp.) They arrived in cattle trucks. Among this lot were four officers. I watched these trucks being cleared of wounded myself from inside of the wire of the camp."

Sergeant C. T. Jackson, 1st Lincolnshire Regiment, testified as follows:

"I was transferred from Erfurt to Langensalza (Sachsen) on April 22, 1916. About July, 1916, Private Penny of the "Buffs" was brought in from Kommando. He was an absolute physical wreck and could not speak to or recognize any of his comrades as the result of the treatment while at work. I was given to understand that the work on this Kommando was the building of houses. He was refused admission to the hospital and remained two days in my barrack room. He was eventually admitted owing to my repeated applications, and died about eight days afterward without recognizing any one. The Russian medical officer, who was a Captain, told me that this man became gradually paralyzed from his feet upward until he died.

"I was in charge of his funeral party and his coffin was handed over to me to be buried by the German unteroffizier in charge of the mortuary. After proceeding about 200 yards toward the cemetery we discovered that the lid of the coffin was not nailed down and on raising it we further discovered that it did not contain the corpse of Private Penny, but that of a Russian. I reported this immediately to the German doctor, who ordered us, under escort, to continue. Private Penny had been buried previously in place of a Russian. I reported this case to the American representative about a month later.

"After the battle of Arras, about 300 wounded British prisoners arrived at Langensalza during the night and were placed on the floor of an empty barrack, with no blankets. At about 8 A. M. the following morning they were taken to the bathhouse, where they remained until 2 P. M. The worst cases were singled out and taken to the hospital. By 6 P. M. five of them had died. The following morning the remainder were paraded and more selected for admission to the hospital. After sitting in the sun for three hours seven more men died, and of this party more than fifty men died altogether. Nearly all these cases were amputations. The Russian doctor told me that had they received proper treatment not one of them would have died."

Corporal Harold Brown, 2d Royal Dublin Fusiliers, testified:

"On April 11, 1915, I was, with about ninety men, sent from Münster II. (Rennbahn) to Zechesibenblaten, (Langendreer,) which is a coal mine. A number of men were put to work in the mine, some in the cokery, and the remainder in the briquette factory. The master of the briquette factory told me that the work we were then doing was done in peace time by Polish labor, owing to the fact that German labor could not be obtained for it.

"During August, 1915, the twenty-four men who worked in the briquette factory refused to work, owing to the fact that the work was causing them to go blind. For refusing to work they were tried by a Feldwebel (Rosenbaum) and each sentenced to three days' confinement in a chemical house, (known as the Spirits of Salts House.) One of these men, (Private Powell, Cheshire Regiment,) who is still in Germany, told me that the temperature of this room was 30 degrees Centigrade, as registered by the thermometer. The fumes from ammonia affected their lungs, and, owing to the heat, they were obliged to strip and remain naked.

"During the three days they were confined in this room their diet consisted of bread and water in the morning and thin soup at night.

"The morning after they were released these men reported sick and were treated by having drops put into their eyes. This treatment was repeated on subsequent occasions. Three were returned to Münster II. Lager as medically unfit about a month afterward, seven were given change of work."

Of those who remained, the statement says: "The condition of these men's eyes when I left them was very bad. They are in great danger of losing their sight."

The foregoing statements are representative of a great number obtained. Some are unprintable. The selections were made with a view to summarizing the whole.

Mr. McCormack will sing an air by Handel, many Irish airs, ancient and modern, and a final group in part American. He includes in his list three war songs, "By the Bivouac's Fitful Flame," written by Hamilton Harty for the Irish troops at the front; "Dear Old Pal of Mine," by Lieutenant Gitz Rice of the Princess Pat Regiment of Canada, and "A Mother's Prayer," composed for this occasion by Gustave Ferrari, musical director of "Chu Chin Chow."

Among the popular melodies are Coleridge-Taylor's "Bamboula," H. T. Burleigh's "Deep River," Johnson's "Walk Together, Children," and old-time "Spirituals" of the slave days. Those taking part are members of the settlement, which for some years has done its work in a district of New York that has sent many negro soldiers to the war.

OUR EXPORT TRADE AFTER THE WAR

Co-operation Under the Webb-Pomerene Bill as a Means of Rehabilitating Devastated Europe

BY GILBERT H. MONTAGUE.

THE Webb-Pomerene bill, to permit co-operation in the American export trade, was passed by Congress because the President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, the Federal Trade Commission, and almost every trade and commercial organization in the country have all united in demanding some workable measure that will safeguard American labor, American capital, and American enterprise in the markets of the world.

Advocated for the relief of American export trade, the Webb-Pomerene bill bids fair to accomplish not only this purpose but also a number of others that together transcend any national, material, and industrial advantage, and, indeed, comprise the highest humanitarian aims for which the United States entered upon the great world war. For in the providence of events this bill seems likely to prove one of the aptest means that American statesmanship could possibly have devised for promptly rehabilitating devastated Europe, for perpetuating the commercial and financial ties now binding the United States to its allies, and for bringing together that league of nations by which alone lasting peace can be assured after the war.

Take down the map of Europe and look at the area that has been fought over: Belgium, Northern France, Northern Italy, East Prussia, Poland, Galicia, Serbia, Rumania, Montenegro, Albania, Lithuania, Courland, Livonia, Ukraine, Finland, comprising altogether more than 100,000 cities, villages and hamlets, in which buildings, railways, bridges, roads, mines, and all kinds of industrial, agricultural, and public property have wholly or partially been destroyed, dismantled, or put out of commission. The Americas estimated in July, 1916, that the probable industrial loss to Belgium and France alone up to that time had been $2,825,000,000. The National Foreign Trade Council in January, 1917, estimated the probable loss of industrial, agricultural, and public property in these two countries alone, up to that time, at $5,755,000,000, and computed the total devastation up to that time in the western and eastern theatres of the war to be $5,985,000,000. The American Industrial Commission to France, which, in the Fall of 1918, investigated conditions in France under the auspices of the American Manufacturers' Export Association and the sanction of the French and the United States Government, found that the devastation was too great to be estimated in totals, and limited its estimates to the extent of the destruction that had occurred in a few industries and in a few regions. Since then the processes of destruction have so increased and expanded, with every prospect of continuing, extending, and intensifying for months and even years to come, that no authority has attempted seriously to form an estimate of the resulting losses.

That these losses in the western and eastern theatres of the war will reach into tens of billions of dollars and will call for the promptest, most economical, most efficient, and most business-like means of rehabilitation that the industrial nations of the world can possibly devise, as soon as this devastation shall cease, is perfectly evident. That American business men, particularly American exporters, will then face the greatest problem of business and humanitarianism, the greatest opportunity for commercial and financial achievement, and the greatest duty of national and international statesmanship that has ever confronted business men in any nation in any period of the world's history is an absolute certainty.

By some the rehabilitation of devastated Europe has been pictured as resembling the reconstruction of the City of San Francisco after the earthquake and fire and the reconstruction of the City of Galveston after the flood.

Commodities and credit from the outside world flowed in upon these cities, after these disasters, and were the means by which courage and energy were stimulated amid the ruins, and new prosperity built up greater than the old.

This analogy, however, when applied to Europe after the war, should not be pressed too far.

Stocks of commodities in every continent will then be dangerously low. Credit, in every financial market, will by that time have become inflated to an unheard of, if not dangerous, degree. Courage and energy in the devastated regions will then be weighed down by unprecedented tax burdens. Throughout Europe there will then be a shortage and demoralization of labor, from which even the United States will probably not wholly escape.

All the means by which immediate and complete rehabilitation has been accomplished, in the few instances of devastation with which American business men in our generation have had to deal in this country, will probably be very sorely handicapped in the case of devastated Europe.

These factors, together with the greater conservatism which Europeans have as compared with Americans, in embarking upon large capital expenditures that can be financed only by extraordinary amounts and terms of credit, seem likely to prevent the reconstruction of Europe after the war from becoming any such industrial "boom" as the total losses in the devastated area might seem to suggest to one trained only in American ideas and American analogies.

Close-range study by the American Industrial Commission to France has revealed these and many other perplexing factors in the problem.

Instead of promptly reconstructing permanent and fully equipped industrial buildings, Europeans are much more likely than Americans to erect temporary structures, costing perhaps one-third of those which were destroyed, and to postpone to the future all reconstruction except that of the most immediate and pressing importance.

In France and England, as in America, the war has raised the chemical industry from a relatively humble position to one of prime importance and size. No one can now tell with which of these three nations will ultimately rest the superior advantage in the manufacture of chemicals. Disappointments and displacements on a large scale, in this and in many other industries which the war has expanded in each of these three countries, are bound to be suffered in one or another of these countries after the war. Which of these three countries, in these and in many similar industries, will eventually carry off the prize of superior efficiency no one can now prophesy.

Standardization of product, with the resulting low costs that accompany large scale production, has hitherto been the prime advantage of America over France and England. Hydraulic forging plants, drop hammers, flanging presses and similar labor saving machinery have heretofore accomplished their best results in America, because here only have been the large-scale consumption and the large-scale production which have permitted labor to produce its greatest amount of product at the lowest cost per unit. The war, however, has accustomed England and France to the highest degree of large-scale production in the manufacture of munitions; with the result that after the war, when these English and French munition factories are converted to other lines of manufacturing, they probably will be able to approximate, in many lines of manufacture, those advantages of large-scale production in which America far surpassed them before the war.

Nevertheless, the re-establishment of manufacturing in devastated Europe can hardly fail to give a remarkable opportunity to American business.

English and French manufacturers of machinery have throughout the war been making munitions, and immediately after the war will hardly be in position to resume prompt deliveries of orders for machinery.

Reconstruction in devastated Europe will probably be financed, in large measure, through Government guarantee of obligations issued by the financial interests undertaking the work of reconstruction.

Already much has been done along this line in connection with the textile industry in Northern France. Out of the purchases of textile machinery made in this country for French account since 1914, it has been estimated that more than half of the textile machinery needed for the rehabilitation of the industry in Northern France has already been assembled and put to work in temporary establishments scattered throughout other parts of France.

Similar acclimatization of American machinery can undoubtedly be accomplished in other industries, and in other regions, throughout devastated Europe, by enterprising American manufacturers after the war. For no matter how long the war lasts, it may safely be assumed that the manufacture of munitions in America will never crowd out the manufacturers of machinery to the degree that the manufacture of munitions has superseded the manufacture of machinery in England and France. The lateness with which America entered the war, the persistent demand of her enormous population for the continuance of her staple manufactures and for the manufacture of machinery necessary for that purpose, and the continued reliance which all the Allies, since 1915, have placed upon American manufacturers of machinery for most of their requirements in that line, all point to the conclusion that devastated Europe must look chiefly to America to supply her most pressing needs for her essential industrial machinery immediately after the war.

With proper representation in Europe, American manufacturers of machinery ought readily to be able to train the staple manufacturing industries in the chief industrial centres of Western Europe to the use of American machinery, and thus to establish for American machinery a permanent and enormously increased foreign market.

Even more alluring is the outlook for agricultural machinery.

While manufacturing may be resumed gradually, agriculture will have to be resumed promptly, and on the largest possible scale.

Probably half the agricultural buildings and practically all agricultural machinery in the devastated regions must be replaced at once.

These two items, for France and Belgium alone, were estimated by the National Foreign Trade Council in January, 1917, to amount to $260,000,000.

Electrical machinery and equipment must also be replaced.

In the territory occupied by the Germans this kind of industrial property, through spoliation and by natural processes of deterioration, has probably suffered more than any other.

Most of the electrical machinery and equipment that will be required immediately after the war must undoubtedly be supplied by American manufacturers. This item, according to the National Foreign Trade Council, amounted to $180,000,000 for France and Belgium alone up to 1917.

Tariff duties, and provisions that patents and trade-marks shall be forfeited unless worked within the country granting them, can hardly count for some time after the war, in the face of all these pressing needs. When immediate needs have been satisfied, such statutory barriers will undoubtedly have their influence. But it must also be remembered that Great Britain and many other European countries have, for years, had these working provisions in their patent laws, and that practically the only result has been that leading American machinery manufacturers have established, under American control, branch factories in each of these countries, and that leading German chemical manufacturers have established, in England, branch chemical works under German control.

Counting the loss of textile machinery, agricultural machinery, and machinery in the electrical industry, the mining industry, the iron and metal industry, the food industries, the chemical industry, the woodworking and furniture industry, and the paper-making industry, the National Foreign Trade Council computed the requirements, for France and Belgium, up to 1917, to be $2,410,000,000. Adding the requirements for railroad equipment and road bed material, for these two countries alone, up to 1917, brought the total up to the colossal figure of $2,885,000,000.

Though some of these requirements can probably be deferred, the greater part of them will have to be supplied immediately after the war.

These figures—all of which are now out of date, and all of which, by the time the war ends, will probably be enormously increased—dimly suggest the task of rehabilitating Europe after the war.

To mobilize American industry, so that America can promptly supply Europe with the means of industrial reconstruction—just as American agriculture, under Mr. Hoover and the Food Administration, now supplies the Allies with the means of physical sustenance—will be the greatest humanitarian and business task that has ever confronted the American export trade.

With all proper safeguards against abuse, the Webb-Pomerene bill permits, in foreign markets, a degree of free action to which the American export trade heretofore has been a stranger.

Under conditions, and with formalities, that are not excessive—considering the rigor of our national policy toward combinations and single concerns of dominant size, and considering the partiality of our national attitude toward competition and independent concerns of small size—the Webb-Pomerene bill permits any American exporter to act in combination with any other American exporter, and with as many, or as few, as he desires, under any arrangement that he and they may agree upon, for any purpose whatever that relates to American export trade, or to trade in any foreign market, so long as such arrangement does not affect trade within the United States, or does not include unfair methods of competition against some outside American competitor who is also engaged in the American export trade.

Such arrangements may be effected through the creation of a corporation, a partnership, a common selling agency, a common sales branch, an exclusive agency, a non-exclusive agency, an individual sales branch, or any kind of contract or understanding whatsoever.

Such arrangements may include an entire industry, or only a few concerns, or only a single concern; and the fact that the parties to such arrangements have theretofore been competitors in domestic trade and in export trade, and thereafter will continue to be competitors in domestic trade, is wholly immaterial.

Such arrangements may provide for the apportionment of orders, profits, losses, business, and territory, or for agreements regarding prices, in foreign markets, upon any basis whatsoever.

Such arrangements may be shaped, and fashioned, and changed, and molded, conformably to the varying requirements of widely differing exports, in widely differing markets, and under widely differing competitive conditions.

So long only as such arrangements do not affect trade within the United States, and do not include unfair methods of competition against some outside American competitor who is also engaged in the American export trade, such arrangements are permitted by the Webb-Pomerene bill.

Only the most effective mobilization of available American manufacturing capacity can begin to supply the most immediate and pressing needs of Europe as soon as the war ends. Even the most essential requirements will promptly swamp the industrial facilities of the whole world, and raise questions of priority that must be determined upon humanitarian rather than business grounds.

While Europe will pay for all she receives, the delivery to her of her requirements will be essentially a humanitarian service. For it will involve diverting to her, and away from other possible customers, products for which others would willingly pay as much, if not more, and which will be denied to others, and furnished to Europe, only for humanity's sake.

Reconstruction in France during the last two years—in Paris, Bordeaux, Marseilles, and Lyons, for instance, for which nearly $100,000,000 was raised by sale of bonds to American investors—has been financed and carried out primarily as a humanitarian enterprise, notwithstanding the magnitude of the business involved.

Whether reconstruction work immediately after the war will officially assume a humanitarian character, and be carried out as relief work under Government, or Red Cross, or other official auspices, or whether it will be carried out simply as a business transaction, its humanitarian aspect will overshadow its business character and inspire the efforts of every American who participates in it.

Our own first year of war has taught us that when troublesome questions of priority are raised by shortage of food, fuel, and transportation facilities, all the savings of efficient co-operation and unified control must be practiced, and—in Mr. Hoover's new classic phrase—"all theories go by the board."

When shortage of everything confronts the whole world after the war and international questions of priority press for solution upon the clearest humanitarian grounds the world may then rejoice that in the American export trade a few "theories" have already gone "by the board," and that the American export trade is then in position to serve humanity with a greater degree of efficient co-operation and unified control.

In the earliest stages of rehabilitation after the war business in large measure will necessarily have to yield to philanthropy. But when all needs superior to business are supplied, and when reconstruction in Europe has assumed its place alongside our own just claims upon the legitimate avails of American commercial achievement, every resource which the Webb-Pomerene bill can then suggest will have to be drawn upon in order to safeguard American labor, American capital, and American enterprise in the markets of the world.

Conditions then will be quite different from those prevailing in America in 1915 and 1916, when the Allies were swamping American manufacturers with orders.

In those years in America stocks and commodities were normal, in some instances abnormal; credit was normal and in some instances subnormal, and labor was adequate and in some instances plentiful.

Through purely fortuitous circumstances, America was then in a high state of industrial preparedness.

Unlike normal export trade in American manufactures, orders which American manufacturers then received from the Allies required no selling effort. Prices were secondary. Deliveries were the prime essential.

Though the buying then for European account was, for the most part, centred in a single purchasing agency, neither the military situation nor the size of the orders permitted that underbidding and depressing of the market which for generations centralized buying for European account has practiced upon the American export trade.

After the war, however, conditions in America as regards stocks of commodities, credit, and labor will probably be the reverse of those existing in 1915 and 1916.

Great labor unrest and discontent, serious industrial displacement, large financial adjustments, enormous tax burdens, and the depressing anxiety resulting from cataclysmic changes and abysmal uncertainty will then weigh heavily upon Europe, and presumably be shared in some degree by America.

Purchases in America after the war, for account of European reconstruction, will undoubtedly be more or less centralized, either in Government agencies or in unofficial but noncompeting buying agencies for foreign interests.

Under conditions vastly different, however, from those prevailing in 1915 and 1916, American manufacturers, in a very short time after the war, will have to face the unified tactics of European buying in their acutest form. Prices will then be tremendously more important than they were in 1915 and 1916. Sharpened by the necessity for the utmost frugality, Europe will promptly become the closest buyer that the American export trade has ever faced. Even after prices are beaten down, the question of deliveries, amid all the perplexities of production under the unprecedented industrial conditions that will then prevail in America, will tend to exclude from the European market all excepting the strongest American exporting organizations.

To meet these widely differing conditions, in widely differing markets, affecting widely differing exports, every resource which the Webb-Pomerene bill can suggest will have to be drawn upon.

The best solution, in some particular situation, may be a corporation, or a partnership, or a common selling agency, or a common sales branch, or an exclusive agency, or a non-exclusive agency, or an individual sales agency, or a simple contract or understanding. It may be an arrangement that includes an entire industry, or one that includes only a few concerns, or one that is limited to a single concern. It may require the apportionment of orders, profits, losses, business, and territory, or agreements regarding prices. Whatever it be, it can, under reasonable conditions, and with certain formalities, be accomplished under the Webb-Pomerene bill, so long as trade within the United States is not affected, and so long as there are no unfair methods against some outside American competitor, who also is engaged in the American export trade.

Albert Ballin, Director General of the Hamburg-American Line, and Walter Rathenau, head of the Allgemeine Electricitaets Gesellschaft, who between them divided the industrial leadership of Germany before the war, have been quoted as stating that Germany after the war will have lost her export trade.

The Iron Age has prophesied that America after the war will still have to supply steel, ships, and industrial and agricultural machinery for the world, because European soldiers returning to work will, in large degree, lack the materials for resuming industrial life, and will all demand higher wages.

Europe undoubtedly will emerge from the war stripped of raw materials and in urgent need of everything with which to rebuild her devastated districts, and with her labor supplies considerably depleted, and with such increased power of labor in politics as will preclude the possibility of such starvation wages as prevailed in Europe after the Napoleonic wars.

So long as the present war continues, America must be the workshop of the Allies, and America's gold supply will continue to be abnormally high.

How strikingly America's position after the war will resemble England's position after the Napoleonic wars must now be apparent.

Between 1792 and 1815, while Europe was devastated by war, England became the workshop of the world. Through the large-scale demand and large-scale production which resulted the English industrial revolution was accomplished, which gave England her commercial superiority over all other nations.

Throughout the Napoleonic conflict English loans had maintained her allies. During the succeeding decade these international credits and the magnitude of Europe's requirements for industrial reconstruction and the willingness of English merchants to expand international credits for that purpose gave England her premier financial position in the world.

International trade always expands after war. Loans to belligerents, while war continues, readjust the disturbed balance of international trade by effecting the payment for food and munitions. Acceptance of new securities, issued by foreign Governments or by foreign industrial enterprises after war ends, settle the large debit balances created by the needs of war and the resulting requirements of reconstruction.

After the war, Professor Irving Fisher has stated, "all Europe will be in the position of a new country, poor in immediate comforts, but relatively rich in future expectations. * * * Such a condition will make for a high rate of interest."

So remarkably does the probable position of America after the present war parallel many features of the position of England after the Napoleonic wars that, in the glamour of that parallel, many responsibilities, perils, and incongruities of America's present position are in danger of being overlooked.

After the war, America's markets and America's gold supply will be sought by every other nation in the world. Unless America is prepared to lose some of both, and to maintain and to expand credits abroad, and to bend every effort to perpetuate the commercial and financial ties now binding her to the Allies, she cannot hope to duplicate the achievement of England after the Napoleonic wars.

Throughout the present war, American foreign trade must depend much upon Governmental action. In directing, and to some degree controlling, the international movement of gold, the Federal Reserve Board, the War Trade Board, and the Secretary of the Treasury have performed, and throughout the duration of the war will undoubtedly continue to perform skilful and invaluable service.

After the war, the Federal Trade Commission, through its power to prevent unfair competition in domestic markets, and the Tariff Commission, through its jurisdiction to prevent "dumping" and other unfair importing practices in the American import trade, can do a great deal to police American world commerce.

The Tariff Commission, also, can do much, after the war, to introduce into America's commercial relations with her allies some of the cordiality which a common military and political purpose throughout the war has developed.

Governmental intervention, however, was not the means by which England maintained her foreign trade after the Napoleonic wars.

Important as are the activities of the Federal Reserve Board, the War Trade Board, the Federal Trade Commission, the Tariff Commission, and the Departments of State and of Commerce, it is upon the freedom and resourcefulness of American exporters rather than upon Government paternalism that America's future in foreign trade depends.

TAXING POKER PLAYERS.

The Authorities in Washington Seem a Bit Unreasonable.

Gentlemen who have had any luck at all in games of chance, and especially poker, will kindly check over their income tax statements for blow-holes, in the light of recent decisions of the taxing authorities at Washington. The authorities take official notice of poker income, but not, however, poker outgo, and the sports will thus kindly include the total amount of their winnings in their statements, allowing no deductions for losses. In the case of crap-shooters and dice teasers this may be difficult, but every poker player undoubtedly has a little notebook in his upper left-hand vest pocket that will furnish the compiled facts.

Games of chance are pretty generally unlawful in the various States of the union, but there is no Federal statute applying within the States against poker and kindred professions; poker winnings are thus taxable, but the poker losses are not deductible. The poker player is caught between two adverse decisions, and loses even when he wins; he may lose half his income playing the game, but must pay taxes on his losses, and if he wins he pays taxes anyhow. Officially, the grand old game is recognized as a source of income, but not [illegible]

The decision looks in the direction of taxing burglary incomes. Any burglars who have forgotten to include the proceeds of their spoils in their statements should take time by the forelock and check over the questionnaire. Because a man blows a safe occasionally is no reason why he should also subject himself to a Federal perjury charge, which may be more serious.—Seattle Post Intelligencer.

A BOASTFUL STATUE.

Missouri Turns Herself Loose in Her Tribute to Doniphan.

History, in so far as it can be recorded on the base of a statue, will give unstinted praise to Colonel Alexander W. Doniphan, for whom Camp Doniphan is named. The Richmond News reports that the Doniphan statue recently erected in Richmond has been accepted and the unveiling will take place in June, either on the anniversary of Colonel Doniphan's election to the offfice of Colonel, or the date he started his expedition into Mexico. It says:

"Inscribed on the east side of the base of the statue are these words: 'Colonel Doniphan was of immense stature, noble appearance, brilliant parts, fearless, of great moral courage, sanguine, faithful, just, poetic in temperament, the champion of the downtrodden, eloquent beyond description, and without doubt entitled to be classed among the greatest orators and lawyers that ever lived.'

"On the west side of the base are the following words: 'Erected by the State of Missouri in honor of Colonel Alexander W. Doniphan, commander 1st Regiment of Missouri Mounted Volunteers in the war with Mexico. Born in Mason County, Ky., July 9, 1808; died in Richmond, Mo., Aug. 8, 1887. On the roster of the great soldiers of the earth must always stand in a halo of glory the name of Colonel Altxander Doniphan of Missouri.'"

Well, Colonel Doniphan was a great man and a great soldier. But will writers of epitaphs and statue inscriptions never learn the emphasis of understatement?—Kansas City Times.

LOOKING AHEAD OF WORLD'S TRADE CHAOS

Banker's Complete Survey of War Finances—Restoration of Order, No Indemnities, No Repudiation Even by Russia, No Conscription of Capital, Revival of Industry

"The capital equipment of the world is bound to be short after the war, and the income of the public in general will be less. Therefore the funds for raw materials, for repairing property and industries and setting new industries going, will be scarce."

By A. C. RATSHESKY

"It would be a mistake for the Allies to plan economic extinctions after the war. History shows that artificial restraints of trade are of little avail. * * * It is realized that all nations must reorganize their forces so as to help their international trade."

Why Mr. Ratshesky's Views Were Sought.

ONE of the largest American corporations, which had many millions of dollars invested in Russia, called for expert advice at the time of the revolution last year. Should it withdraw those investments? The question was put to many authorities on foreign finance and industry, including bankers of international fame.

With a single exception, every expert advised the corporation to "stand pat." The exception was A. C. Ratshesky, President of the United States Trust Company in Boston.

"Pull out of Russia!" That, in effect, was his warning.

"But it will cost us a great part of our investment," the President of the corporation argued. "To liquidate our holdings, suddenly, means a loss of at least 50 per cent."

"Do it if it means 90 per cent.," Mr. Ratshesky insisted.

He was one man against all the other financial experts the corporation had consulted, but his advice was accepted. Subsequent events fully justified it. Later the corporation President said:

"Ratshesky is the best-informed man on the foreign situation in the United States."

That was why Mr. Ratshesky was asked to write this article.

He is a native Bostonian, and on the occasion of his fiftieth birthday, three years ago, was the founder of a charity trust fund of $100,000, since then largely increased. Among the corporations he helps to direct are the Paritan and Chelsea Trust Companies of Boston, and the Winnisimmet Company. He has been a member of the Boston Common Council, the Massachusetts State Senate and State Board of Charity, a delegate to the Republican National Convention, and President of the Federation of Jewish Charities.

WILL bankruptcy end the war? Has the German policy of raising funds for enormous expenditures brought the nation near financial collapse? We see such statements frequently in newspapers and popular magazines.

How much better off are France and Russia than Germany? Can any or all of them pay their inconceivably large debts after the war, or is repudiation inevitable? How would all this affect America?

These questions and related ones are occupying the minds of many of us today. They are questions which no one can answer with any certainty, but this article is offered as suggesting some of the facts we do know, which indicate the future.

The nation's war debts and the possible expedients of taxation are the things we think about when questions like the above are raised. The arrangements for raising money to pay for war needs—loans and taxes—appear, at first glance, to be the only subjects we need to study, and they are, indeed, the first things to have in mind when you are considering the finances of nations. They are like the banking operations of a business house. They register the prosperity and solvency of the nations.

But if you want to know how a business concern is going to work out financially in the course of time, you ask not only about its bank account, but also about the outlying sources of its prosperity—its markets, materials, labor supplies. And so with nations: behind their treasury operations lies their national wealth, which depends upon materials, markets, and labor. The war changes in Germany will affect the United States and other countries far more through readjustments in trade relationships after the war than through any holdings of her public debt, or her citizens' property. I shall, therefore, consider first the public finances in the narrow sense of Germany, France, and Russia as I see them, and then the new international trade situation after the war—again as I see it.

GERMANY'S VAST DEBT.

Germany's plans for financing the war at its outbreak seem to have been along two lines: To raise all the paper money she could, regardless of inflation, through the Reichsbank; and to float loans through the loan banks to make up for the deficiencies of the first. In Germany the Government is responsible to the bank on its Treasury bills and the bank is responsible to the public on its own notes. Before the war the bank was responsible for the repayment of its notes in gold, but since the law of August, 1914, it has been relieved of this obligation.

Her floating debt in March, 1918, was estimated at about $1,450,000,000 and the funded debt, or bonds, at something like $25,000,000,000. It is, however, very difficult, indeed, to get at the total amount raised in war loans in any of the belligerent countries, because most of them allow bonds of former issues to be exchanged for new bonds of the later issues. Therefore, if the issues were all added up, it would give a purely fictitious sum. As the German peasant in the cartoon says, "For my 100 marks I got a receipt. * * * For the third loan I gave my second receipt. Have I invested 300 marks, and has the Government got 300 marks, or have both of us got nothing?"

The German method of financing the war differs from that of England in that very little of the expense as yet has been met by taxation. One reason for this is that the Imperial Government is not allowed to levy direct taxes, this being reserved for the different States, somewhat as in America, and the empire has depended to a large extent on indirect taxes, such as customs. But the empire could levy direct taxes through enforcing contributions from the States if it desired, and so the policy of raising war funds entirely by loans and paper money is deliberate, based on the early expectation of paying the war expenses out of an indemnity imposed on the defeated opponents.

The support of the banks in the loan policy was secured, according to President G. Vissering of the Netherlands Bank, in the following manner:

> The private banks of Germany were evidently not so sure what course to pursue in the beginning of the crisis. It appears that many of them hesitated considerably and seemed inclined to limit their credit facilities and even to withdraw them altogether. Such an attitude would have been especially fatal in Germany, where the banks are so deeply interested in manufactures, building schemes, &c., investments which cannot be easily realized at a moment's notice. The Reichsbank then came forward and made it clear to those banks that seemed uncertain what line to take—that business, as usual, not retrenchment, was to be the watchword of the moment, and that those who continued to carry on their business might count on the very liberal support of the Reichsbank. Although, therefore, the private banks at first showed hesitation and weakness, the firm support of the Reichsbank soon enabled them to see their way clear.

The national debt of Germany at the beginning of the war was fairly large. The Franco-Prussian war had cost the country four hundred and thirty-eight million, but she gained Alsace-Lorraine and a billion indemnity, so that the new empire started life with $580,000,000 on hand. The building of the navy and other unremunerative national enterprises brought up the debt to a billion dollars at the beginning of the present war.

The debt as it now stands of about $25,000,000,000 requires an annual interest charge of nearly $1,000,000,000, compared with her total budget before the war of about $2,500,000,000. An amount equal to the annual interest is required each year for war pensions, and one-half that amount for the replenishment of war supplies. I am not informed how much the taxes in Germany have been increased since the beginning of the war, but reports are that they are not taxing enough to pay the present interest on the national debt, but are borrowing to meet this charge. Such a policy, of course, makes the debt increase faster. It rolls up like a snowball.

Before taking up the question of where Germany is coming out on her finances, let us glance for a moment at the financial policies of France and Russia.

POLICY IN FRANCE.

France had a much larger debt than Germany before the war. It was, however, largely in the form of rentes, (Government evidences of indebtedness in France,) a theoretically perpetual interest charge, the capital not expected ever to be repaid. In 1870 the interest charge on the outstanding debt was about eight million dollars, but in 1914 it had risen to one hundred and twenty-seven millions. This charge, capitalized at 3½ or 4 per cent., would make something like three to three and one-half billion dollars as what we would call the national debt at the outbreak of the war. According to other figures, however, the interest charge at the outbreak of the war was two hundred million dollars a year, and the capitalized debt about six and one-half billions.

The Franco-Prussian war had cost France $1,750,000,000, and the payment of the enormous indemnity forced upon her by Germany testified to her powers of recuperation. Nearly $950,000,000, including interest, was actualy paid to Germany inside of two years, due to the good management of the Bank of France and to the thrifty habits of the people. Her public credit has long been good. France is the land of the small investor. There are, at present, estimated to be 4,500,000 individual owners of rentes.

During the war the debt has been increased by loans to something like $16,000,000,000 or $20,000,000,000. At the present rate of expenditures it may amount, by the first of 1919, to $30,000,000,000. The annual interest charge at the end of 1917 was estimated by M. Flotz, Minister of Finance, at nearly $900,000,000. The expected addition of the 1918 expenditures will increase the interest charge by $570,000,000, making a total of almost $1,500,000,000 by the end of the war. The peace budget of the central Government was about $1,200,000,000 annually. The war, by the end of the present year, will have increased it to $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000 a year, about three times what it was in 1914.

The French, like the Germans, have not increased taxes very much, but have borrowed on the rentes and special war loans. M. Ribot has given figures which indicate that the country is meeting only about 14 per cent. of its present expenditures out of taxation.

RUSSIAN SITUATION.

Now let us look at the situation in Russia. Russia was heavily in debt before the war. Her economic development has been recent, and she has gone heavily into debt to develop her railroads and her natural resources. Previous to 1810 she had no national debt, but the invasion of Napoleon caused her to borrow, up to 1820, sums amounting to $170,000,000, which were loaned by Dutch merchants, at rates as high as 7½ per cent. In 1815 an issue of paper money of $400,000,000 is said to have been made. At various times have been added bonds, until the total debt was $4,500,000,000 in 1914, a large part of which represents railroad construction.

Russia has always met her external obligations. France is her main creditor. She has borrowed a great deal during the present war from Great Britain and her other allies, Great Britain alone having lent her $1,250,000,000. Her total debt seems, at the present time, to be about as large in dollars as the other countries we are considering, but, of course, the per capita debt is small, owing to her huge population. It is, in fact, smaller than was that of most nations before the war began.

Russia has experimented with taxation rather more than the others, although the proportion of the war expenses so far raised in that manner is probably no larger. The abolition of vodka was doubtless a needed social reform, but it struck off 94 per cent. of the revenue in one blow. During 1915 and 1916 two new taxes were introduced; an excess profits tax, and a general income tax. The former, put into effect Jan. 1, 1916, is levied on all profits in excess of 8 per cent. on the capital employed in the business, and in excess of the average profits in 1913-1914.

When the war broke out, Russian bonds held in France declined sharply. They later rallied, and it was in Paris that most of the Russian financing of the war was done.

About two years ago Russian bonds of the issue of 1916 began to be bought up in Boston, and customers appeared for large numbers of them. When the bonds arrived and were translated, I am told it was found that the Government of Russia nowhere bound itself expressly to pay, and gold payment was not specified. Then the doings of the revolutionists in Russia made the bond salesmen feel a little dubious, so they protected themselves by buying "gold fours" issued in 1894, which were not intended to be sold abroad, and which specified both the rate of exchange and payment in gold. The 1916 issue was called "Kerensky money," and it has depreciated rapidly.

To conclude the discussion of the course of the public debts up to the present time, I give a summary of the total debts and annual debt charges of the three countries, as of Jan. 1, 1917, from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce:

	Debt.	Debt Charges.
France	$16,035,000,000	$580,000,000
Russia	12,127,000,000	371,000,000
Germany	13,382,000,000	849,000,000

Another interesting table shows the cost of the wars of history approximately:

Napoleonic wars, 1793-1815	$6,250,000,000
Crimean war, 1853-1856	1,700,000,000
American civil war, 1861-1865	5,000,000,000
Franco-Prussian war, 1870-1871	3,500,000,000
South African war, 1899-1902	1,250,000,000
Russo-Japanese war, 1904-1905	2,300,000,000

HOW MUCH CAN THEY STAND?

The next question that might be asked is, How long can this piling up of debt on debt go on? How much will the nations at war, Germany in particular, be able to stand? Before the war, M. de Block, the Russian economist, calculated that all wars before the Crimean cost $6,500,000,000, and he declared that a new war would bankrupt the world. And yet, up to this time his $6,500,000,000 has been spent sixteen times, and the end of the war seems further away than ever.

We have seen that Germany's debt rolls up, perhaps, more rapidly than those of the other countries, on account of her borrowing to pay the interest. Her pyramiding of credit through the banks in raising loans—that is, allowing every one all along the line to buy bonds on credit—and her large issues of unsecured Treasury notes are bringing about larger and larger inflation of currency, and preparing a greater and greater shock when international trade is resumed and international payments go on a specie basis. The ever increasing issues of loans in Germany, as well as in all countries, promise a larger and larger proportion of the wealth of the future to descendants of the lenders of today. And all these considerations are serious in the eyes of the business men of all nations.

But in spite of all this, I find it difficult to believe that financial difficulties will stop the war. War is carried on by a temporary socialization of industry; raw materials normally used in making things we can get along without are diverted to making explosives and guns, and there is still enough left to provide soldiers and civilians with the absolute necessities of life. No country as yet has been reduced to the absolute minimum of subsistence, and the surplus annual product of industry over what is really necessary to maintain us can be devoted to destruction without exhausting either side.

It may even be that the Germans can stand more war expense than the other nations, because the people are more accustomed to coercion. We cannot tell how much more they will stand before they will revolt. The German Government still will be able to float considerable quantities of paper money before the people get to the point where they will not buy sufficient bonds.

A. C. RATSHESKY, BOSTON BANKER.

QUESTION OF INDEMNITY.

Turning now to the questions of how the debts will be taken care of after the war, we meet suggestions of indemnities and repudiation, as well as various methods of meeting the obligations.

The issue of indemnities is still a live one. Germany doubtless hopes, by a smashing victory in the west this Spring, to get indemnities from the other countries large enough to pay an appreciable share of her war expenses. At the beginning of the war she counted confidently on financing the whole of it by levies on France and England. When the United States entered the war, it was the occasion for a number of German papers to announce their intention to make the United States foot the German war bills.

Austria has caught the contagion. The Austrian economist, Sommeregger, writing in the Reichspost, received at Milan Dec. 22, 1917, complains about "the vast ocean of debts and taxes" accumulating in Austria, and appeals for an indemnity. "By January, 1918," he says, "the debts will be $10,000,000,000," and adds:

> "The pre-war debt was about $2,000,000,000, and, counting the expense of dismantling and restoration, the total will be $11,000,000,000. Austria's war loans cover actual expenses only about 50 per cent., while the obligations she has contracted with Austro-German banking concerns can only be reached approximately on the basis of interest."

By December of this year, 1918, Austria will need $500,000,000 to meet interest charges. Herr Sommeregger ends by calling attention to the poverty of Austria and predicts her ruin unless she receives special indemnity.

Dr. Karl Helfferich, formerly Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, used often to speak of the war indemnity as a foregone conclusion, and on March 18, in a speech to the Import Trades Association, according to press reports he again referred to the subject, but in a rather modified manner. He said: "We demand restoration for all violation of law and all acts of destruction. We demand indemnification for all damage done." Certain payments for property destroyed in occupied areas may, in fact, be agreed to, at the conclusion of peace, but if the outcome is not a complete triumph for Germany, there will probably be no indemnities which will have any effect on the vast war debts. One German suggestion which has been made is that the Allies indemnify Germany for her colonies, the fund to be used in rehabilitating Belgium. They will, of course, force Germany, by some means, to make this restoration if they possibly can.

ALIEN PROPERTY HERE.

The United States is fortunate in holding another pledge from Germany to barter with in the peace conference, similar to the invested colonies, and, perhaps, about as valuable; namely, alien property in American territory. This property is of the most varied kinds, including ships, docks, and shares in American corporations, patents, and many other forms of property previously owned by German citizens. It is now to be appropriated and sold, and the proceeds to be held in the United States Treasury. The amount of such property can only be estimated, but recent reports have put it as high as $1,000,000,000.

No figures showing the amount of American investments in Germany are available, but the indications are that they are relatively small, according to some estimates not one one-hundredth as much as German-owned property in the United States. Germany is crowded and well exploited by her own people, and thus has not generally been a fruitful field for foreign investment. Upon the outbreak of war in 1914 American merchants had great stores of merchandise—hardware, toys, &c.—in Germany, but much of this got to us through Holland. A number of American firms had set up branch offices and factories in Germany, such as the International Harvester Company, the United Shoe Machinery Company, the National Cash Register Company, and the Standard Oil Company, but aside from these we have relatively little at stake in actual investments within the empire.

One proof of the balance being heavily in our favor is the fact that Germany had made such a loud protest against our seizing her citizens' property, and threatened retaliatory action on our property in Germany. It is perfectly safe to say that the retaliation would be taken without any protest, if it were equal to the loss.

As not much relief from the debts is to be expected through indemnities, there remains the question of whether there may not be repudiation on the part of some or all nations, and if not, what new fiscal expedients may be expected.

There are a few cases in the world's history where national debts have been repudiated. Some of the American States repudiated their debts in the crisis of 1887, but the effect of this internationally was lessened by the fact that their sovereignty was merged in that of the Union. It is, however, a very instructive example of the penalty of repudiation, for American credit has never survived the shock of that repudiation with many English investors. Repudiation through paper money is a more common experience and it has happened in most of the great nations within the last 150 years.

But of late years no nation has dared to repudiate its foreign debts. The countries have become so much dependent upon each other for food, raw materials, and other supplies that international trade and international credit have become common terms. The day of national self-sufficiency is gone, so that the nation which should repudiate its national debt would find its credit gone and its whole national development blocked. It would be economic suicide.

Germany probably would be debarred also from repudiation by the consideration that the war expenses would thereby be made to press unequally on different classes of her people. The Government there has usually been precise and scientific in its actions, and so it will doubtless take measures to distribute the burdens of the war more equally than would be accomplished by simple non-payment of the bonds. There will be considerable internal discontent about the payment of such a large amount of interest, but there would be more effective discontent over non-payment. There would, moreover, be no opportunity to injure other nations, since the debt is practically all held within Germany. Repudiation would simply destroy German credit abroad and choke off a large portion of the country's commerce.

THREAT OF BOLSHEVIKI.

There has been some talk in Russia about repudiation since the Bolshevist Government came into power, but so far nothing has been done. I believe one interest payment on the present loans has been made by the Bolsheviki. A more conservative Government is likely to come into power before the end of the war, and their desire to attract foreign capital for internal development, and the small proportion of the debt to the resources of the country will doubtless prevent them from foreign repudiation. A comparatively small part of the Russian loans is held in the United States. Her chief creditors, as mentioned, are France and England. The same considerations as mentioned about modern Governments in general apply to France and the additional one that her loans are widely distributed, so that a larger number of people have an interest in seeing that Government's obligations continue to be honored.

But while total repudiation is entirely unlikely, part repudiation in the form of taxes on the interest from Government bonds seems inevitable in all countries. Such taxes will not bear exclusively on bonds, however, placing bondholders at a disadvantage compared with receivers of other forms of income, but will probably be progressive taxes on incomes of all kinds. We must recognize that customs duties cannot be greatly increased without shutting off foreign trade, and the other normal revenues are going to be radically short of the requirements to meet the increased charges. There is some talk among radicals in England now of heroic measures, such as wiping off the principal of the debt immediately after the war by an assessment of property. One form of this proposal is to tax away all of the increase of every person's property since the beginning of the war. The difficulty about such "conscription of capital" is that every property owner can't sell a quarter or a half of his property and pay taxes to the full amount. There would be nobody to buy. It would simply amount to the State's assuming a miscellaneous and heterogeneous lot of property which it would be wholly unable to manage.

However, the taxes favored by economists in recent years, such as taxes on the rents of the natural resources, like land, will probably be more employed after the war than they were before. One interesting method of accomplishing this which is, according to some reports, to be the German Government's policy for raising extra funds, is as follows: The cartel or trust movement is to be fostered and encouraged in every way, and they are to charge for their output all that the traffic will bear in any direction. The Government, being part owner of each of them and in touch with all matters of returns and expenditures, will tax the monopoly gains as heavily as possible, and still leave an incentive to the owners or managers. The State-owned railways will doubtless be made to yield all that the traffic will bear, and some additional revenue can doubtless be procured in that direction, and for several years after the war all railways in the countries under discussion will be State-owned railways. The remaining public domains, such as ungranted land in the colonies, water power sites, and mines, may be exploited for revenue, with increased activities by the States which own them.

A semi-public body in England has made the following statement, which probably indicates governmental influence: "The credit of the State is the capital investment of the individual." This indicates that England realizes that war debts are to be paid, not by conscripting capital, but by encouraging industries, trade, commerce, and economic activity of all kinds.

Likewise in Germany, one writer, quoted in The Economist, (London,) proposes that the Imperial Government adopt the following measures after the war:

1. Levy a heavy tax upon all raw materials so as to encourage an economical use of them.
2. Increase the labor supply by encouraging large families. This to be done by lightening whatever taxes are imposed upon families rearing children.
3. Germany must partially recoup from the effects of the war by acquiring territory. The "black fields of Russia" are mentioned in particular.
4. Germany should not antagonize Great Britain, since she needs the raw materials furnished by the British Empire in order to start her commerce and industries going again.

Another writer, Max Haller of Berlin, proposes the following measures as promising to relieve Germany's distress after the war:

1. The entire cargo space of the empire shall be placed under Imperial control. This is to insure its economical disposal.
2. All imports shall be rationed on the basis of the import figures for the last year of peace. Import prohibitions being applied in the case of certian goods, i. e., luxuries, &c.
3. Private individuals are not to be allowed the independent disposal of their credits abroad, or property which they might use to obtain credit abroad.
4. Imperial supervision of the export of all raw materials, as well as of semi-manufactured goods.
5. Special State organizations to supervise imports. The element of unity to be emphasized throughout.

The significant thing about all of these proposals is that they are essentially economic rather than financial, which bears out the assertion that Germany's trade and manufacturing are her life, and that whatever financial reverses she has suffered, her only means of recouping is by means of increased wealth through economic activity. It is of less interest to her how she shall arrange her systems of taxation than how she can procure trade advantages which will enable her to start upon a round of productive effort which will turn millions into her coffers. This war has proved that the Germans have a sense of thrift.

DEPLETION DUE TO WAR.

The war loans are indications of the depletion which the war has wrought on the world's stock of goods. Since the great mechanical inventions of the beginning of the last century and the conquest of nature by men full of economic enterprise, the world has become accustomed to a continuous flow of capital or productive energy, which could be devoted to building factories, railroads, dams, and irrigation ditches. The advantage of rolling up capital in this way is that consumable goods are produced more and more cheaply by the greater service procured from natural forces.

We are so used to an abundance of investment capital that it is hard for us to believe that the supply will be diminished. Moreover, Government bonds have been issued against so large a part of the war expenditures that the amount of capital in the world seems to be as large as ever. The owners have given up one form of paper and got another piece of paper from the Government. But the property so given up has been sunk and burned and blown up. It has not gone into the construction of factories which will turn out the goods wanted. The Government paper simply figures in the distribution of the total product after the war, and the total product will be diminished by the loss of men and raw materials and the deterioration of plants and destruction of property.

Let us notice the proportion of the war cost to the amount of capital normally available for investment in securities. A French financial journal puts the amount of new capital normally available in each of the four years before the war at about four billion dollars. This was supposed to be twice as much as maximum years' figures before 1896.

As has been shown by the estimates above, the total costs of the war may well run above one hundred billion dollars, which would make the interest charges thereafter something like four or five billions a year.

Not all of the war expense is deduction from the world's capital. A good deal of it is the normal subsistence of the soldiers and artisans engaged, which would have been consumed anyway, and much capital is made available for the war, which would not otherwise have been saved, by decreased consumption and economies by all the peoples. Moreover, the interest paid on the debt after the war does not necessarily represent a subtraction from capital, because it will be available for investment by the bondholders.

Nevertheless, the capital equipment of the world is bound to be short after the war, and the income of the people in general will be less. Therefore the funds for raw materials, for repairing property and industries, and setting new industries going, will be scarce, and will command a higher price; and a higher rate of interest for some time than the rate before the war seems inevitable.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE.

The readjustments between nations, made necessary by the war, are in their economic and trade relations as important as their public debts. International trade has been the great source of the wealth of Great Britain and Germany. It has given them advantages from their natural resources, and from the industrial skill of their inhabitants, which they never could have obtained if they had been shut up within themselves. France in a less degree has also reached her full development through trade with other lands. Markets have been developed beyond the frontier when they were not adequate at home. It is, therefore, worth while to go into the international relations before the war, in order to hazard a few forecasts as to the more general economic effects after the war.

Contrary to popular opinion, the trade with South America, Africa, and the Orient is a negligible factor in world commerce. The bulk of business is transacted between the great producing nations themselves—England, (with her colonies,) Germany, France, Russia, and the United States. Thirteen per cent. of Germany's imports are from Probable Results of World Upheaval.

HERE are some striking paragraphs from Mr. Ratshesky's article:

I find it difficult to believe that financial difficulties will stop the war. War is carried on by a temporary socialization of industry; raw materials normally used in making things we can get along without are diverted to making explosives and guns, and there is still enough left to provide soldiers and civilians with the absolute necessities of life.

*German trade is progressing in foreign countries even now, and when after the war Germany seeks world markets again, she hopes and expects these branches [of banks and trade organizations] will be able to connect with her again. * * * No one need delude himself into thinking that German interests have been "rooted out" of foreign countries.*

Our millions of soldiers in France cannot be returned all at once at the conclusion of peace, and while they remain, it is to be hoped that they can lend their aid in the task of rebuilding. The vast amount of industrial equipment which we have sent to France to supply our army, the railroads, warehouses, and even factories, will probably never be returned, but will be sold to the French or Belgian people on credit for their own use after the war.

Germany's trade and manufacturing are her life, and whatever financial reverses she has suffered, her only means of recouping is by means of increased wealth through economic activity.

The war has been a cataclysm disrupting all peaceful relations. Commercial treaties have been abrogated, sources of supply cut off, new trade relations formed.

The nations of the earth will compete with each other, as never before, for commercial supremacy.

the United States, and a still larger percentage is from the British Empire. These great nations are one another's best customers. This gives an idea of how strong the incentive will be to go back to their pre-war conditions of trade.

One index of a country's importance in foreign trade is the gross value of its exports. The United States averaged in the years 1901-1908 somewhat more than either England or Germany, each country being more than a billion. A decade later we had fallen to second place, and the values were all more than two billions. Germany had increased during that time 92 per cent., England 71 per cent., the United States 62 per cent. England's exports were worth $124 per capita, Germany's $62 per capita, and the United States' $37 per capita. These figures indicate the degree of necessity against national self-sufficiency.

Another index is the merchant marine. The United States had about one million tons of foreign shipping, England twenty million, Germany five million. England transports more than 40 per cent. of her overseas commerce, Germany 30 per cent., France 30 per cent., and we less than 10 per cent. Our large reliance on foreign carriers was a great handicap when the war came, as the carriers were withdrawn from us to their own countries.

The submarine, of course, has taken a large toll of British and neutral shipping. Germany has lost many tons through commandeering in enemy ports, and the United States has been building shipping with ever increasing rapidity. We should have eight or ten million tons after the war, which will doubtless make considerable difference in the international trade situation. Germany is frequently reported to be building merchant fleets in preparation for peace, but it seems doubtful whether she could build many fleets while her needs for submarines and other war construction are so important.

UNITED STATES TRADE.

In one hundred years our foreign trade has increased twenty-five times and our population thirteen times. Of late years our imports of foodstuffs and manufactured goods have decreased, while crude manufacturing materials, as well as manufactures for use, have increased. Between 1880 and 1898 two main items in our exports were foodstuffs and food animals. Then, due to our advantages decreasing relatively to those of Argentina and other countries, these articles declined up to the war.

England gets 17 per cent. of her imports from us, Germany 14 per cent., and France 8 per cent. The South American countries get from 20 to 30 per cent. of their goods from us, while China, India, and Morocco get less than 5 per cent. Sixty per cent. of our exports go to Europe, (this large percentage indicates the importance of our trade relations with the warring nations,) 23 per cent. to North America, and 6 per cent. to South America. Russia is ninth in importance in our foreign trade, though if those of our exports which go to her through Germany were counted she would rank fourth in importance. (The fact that Germany may have a say on many of our exports to Russia may have its effect upon international trade relations after the war. Perhaps Germany will try to shut down on us, both to increase her own revenue and to supplant us in the Russian market.)

We produce one-half the copper of the world. Germany buys enormous quantities of it from us, and will be forced to buy it after the war, whether or not there is "animosity" toward us. One-fourth of our exports are cotton. Of this valuable commodity we possess almost a world monopoly, and the great textile countries have failed to procure independence of us by stimulating cotton production in Egypt, India, and Russia. Our exports of cotton total six hundred and ten million dollars annually, a large percentage of it going to England, Germany, and France. Germany practically depends upon us to furnish her with materials for her thousands of spindles; and the production of cheap cotton goods with which she floods England, the United States, and particularly the foreign markets, where she sells vast quantities of coarse garments to people with relatively low purchasing power, is directly conditioned upon cotton trade relations with us. Germany has for years tried to procure cotton fields of her own, in anticipation of a war which might estrange her from the American sources, but the sterility of her own colonies and her failure to drive Britain from Egypt have resulted in her utter failure.

Let us turn to more definite figures. Our exports in peace times are proportioned as follows: Britain and her colonies take $1,134,000,000, or 46 per cent. of our total exports; Germany, $332,000,000, and France takes $146,000,000. Russia takes $25,000,000. Of foodstuffs and raw materials alone we exported during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, the following:

Belgium	61,219,894
France	159,819,824
Germany	344,794,276
Russia in Europe	30,088,543
United Kingdom	294,271,983

FOREIGN CAPITAL HERE.

All these figures denote an enormous activity here in the United States, and it must be remembered that our development has proceeded to a large extent from the investment of foreign capital in the United States. This capital has gone into railroads, public utilities, farms, mines, &c. It is represented by stocks, bonds, notes, and direct ownership of properties.

Estimates of the amount of such investments here at the outbreak of war vary greatly, so that it is not wise to use figures, but all agree that the total is large. Early in 1915 foreigners held approximately $2,700,000,000 par value of American railway securities. On Jan. 1, 1915, they were said to hold $150,000,000 par value of United States Steel Corporation shares. In 1915, on account of the war, foreign-held American securities were sold to the par value of $1,800,000,000. A strong sentiment now exists in favor of ridding ourselves of German interests and control over any of our industries, but the fact is that this country has until recently received large financial assistance from English investors, and the English holdings at the outbreak of the war were very much larger than German. Such foreign investments are a disadvantage in time of war, since they afford vantage grounds for enemy activities, but in peace, while we were a country with undeveloped resources, they had the same advantage to us that invested capital has to any young and struggling enterprises.

The following table of our chief exports to Germany and imports from Germany may be of interest to show the lines of interest of the two countries in one another. The figures are for the fiscal year 1913 (United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce):

GERMAN TRADE.

With Germany foreign trade is vital, one-fifth of the population subsisting upon overseas trade. The empire is poor agriculturally, (although it has produced as high as 80 per cent. of its own subsistence,) and has been forced by this barrenness, as well as encouraged by rich deposits of coal and iron, to take to foreign trade. The United States has derived large profits from international trade because of the advantage our natural resources give us; England relies upon colonial and sea power; and Germany upon thrift, science, and organization. Manufacturing is the basis of her economic life, the whole system of banks, export houses, merchants, Government-owned steamships, and State railways being welded into a unified and efficient organization, which has for its purpose the exploitation of trade and manufacturing.

Unlike Britain, Germany has no colonies to supply her with raw materials. Cameroon, Togoland, King Wilhelm's Land, German Southeast Africa, and German Southwest Africa are liabilities rather than assets, in spite of the mother country's frantic attempts to convert them into suppliers of raw materials and purchasers of finished goods. Germany must get practically all of her raw materials except coal and iron from abroad, a fact which places her more or less at the advantage of other nations. Her great wealth and progress have been largely the story of clever utilization of other nations' resources, importing raw or semi-manufactured articles, and working them up for re-export. Foreign orders she procured by extension of long-time credits, ingeniously managed by taking advantage of London banking facilities and the system of acceptances. Before the war she depended on the British Empire, not only for raw materials (from the British colonies) and much shipping, but also for credit machinery. The pound sterling remained the standard of value in spite of Germany's attempts to oust it in favor of the mark, and Germany continued, until 1914, to be greatly dependent upon England physically and financially.

The British trader is individualistic, unhampered by his Government, and careless of small orders. The German is a small dealer, is always ably supplemented by German banks, German Consuls, Government ships, special rates on railroads, export syndicates or cartels, &c. He goes after the small order, is diplomatic, makes friends with his customers, imitates the superior goods of other nations, and wins customers by offering long credits. The Government backs him up in this, even when he overreaches, as he did in China some years ago. (Overextension of long credits led to the ruin of many German traders in the Orient, and led to the demand of the German Government that the Government of China enforce payment of these debts.)

GERMAN INVESTMENTS.

The Reichs-Marine Amt, in a report of December, 1905, on "The development of German marine interests during the last decade," gave an estimate of German foreign investments, on the basis of Consular reports. Foreign securities in the possession of strictly German holders they placed at $4,000,000,000, and the amount of capital in foreign industrial and commercial enterprises as between $1,925,000,000 and $2,300,000,000. Thus, in 1905, the total foreign investments of Germans totalled about $6,000,000,000. (American estimates are above this figure.) The net increase in 1913 was estimated as proceeding at the rate of $300,000,000 a year, so that German foreign investment at the beginning of the war may be taken at about $8,500,000,000.

Intimately connected with these holdings is the system of overseas banks which Germany has established. The aim of these banks has been to assist the German export merchant, to develop the German colonies, to furnish German cable connections, to secure a share in foreign-Government-loan projects, to assist German shipping, to strengthen Germany in case of a war. The Deutsche Bank, founded in 1870, was the pioneer in the campaign for foreign expansion. Until then the German foreign trade had depended upon London banks, and German acceptances, especially in view of the monetary conditions in Germany, were discounted at an unfavorable rate, compared with the sterling bills. Germany failed to establish an agency in London up to 1874, but in 1871 the Deutsche Bank opened an office in New York. It has numerous branches—in Chile it has seven, in Argentina five, in Peru four, in Spain two, and in Brazil one. It is part owner of the Mexikanische Bank für Handel und Industrie in Mexico City. It has financed a number of State and railway issues in the United States.

The next in prominence of the large banks of Germany is the Disconto-Gesellschaft. It has five branches in Brazil, one in Buenos Aires, and nine branches in Chile with a total capital of $2,380,000. The Banca Commerciale Italiana was founded in 1894, with the participation of the Deutsche Bank, Disconto-Gesellschaft, Dresdner Bank, and three others. Its head office is in Milan, and it has fifty-four branches in Italy. The widest spread German bank in the Levant is the Deutsche Orientbank A. G., which was established about 1906. Its main office is at Berlin, with a branch at Hamburg. It has branches at Constantinople, Adrianople, and seven placed in Egypt, with four in Asia Minor. In 1886 the Deutsche Bank organized the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank, which was superseded in 1903 by the Banco Aleman Transatlantico. The last named now has twenty-eight branches—two in Spain, nine in Chile, six in Argentina, four in Peru, four in Brazil, two in Bolivia, and one in Uruguay.

BANKS AS TRADE FACTORS.

It is hardly possible to overestimate the importance of German banks in overseas trade. The Deutsche, the Dresdner, and the Disconto have each a capital of 200,000,000 marks, the Darmstaedter a capital of, 160,000,000, the Schaafhausen 145,000,000, and the Berliner Handelsgesellschaft a capital of 110,000,000 marks. All this capital is placed at the disposal, as it were, of the German traders. German capital is invested in every continent and in a variety of undertakings.

We might summarize the importance of German foreign banks as follows:

1. Germany's great foreign trade, carried on almost entirely on credit, has been made possible through the co-operation of her large banks.

2. Through the system of acceptances German banks have used influence with London to enable the small German trader to extend long credits, and thus underbid his rivals.

3. In no country in the world do the banks help foreign trade as much as in Germany. They extend loans, furnish credit information, discount long bills, guarantee contracts, &c.

4. The foreign branches, which are "always on the spot" and willing to oblige, stimulate orders from foreign customers.

5. The participation of German banks in the development of many foreign industrial, railway, and mining enterprises provided outlets for German exports.

Since the war the foreign branches of German banks have necessarily been quiescent, but Germany had prepared for war and had so arranged the management of these banks that, although the central power remained in Germany, they might in time of a crisis become autonomous and continue to function without connections with Germany. Germany has trained a host of men who go abroad expecting to stay there the rest of their lives, and who are now taking care of German interests abroad, even though there be no intercourse with the mother country.

So that German trade is progressing in foreign countries even now, and when after the war Germany seeks world markets again, she hopes and expects these branches will be able to connect with her again.

It is beyond doubt that these many foreign banks are preparing for peace orders, sizing up new prospects, and even taking orders in advance. No one need delude himself into thinking that German interests have been "rooted out" of foreign countries. Except in the case of actual conquest, (as the taking over of her colonies by the Allies,) her economic and financial interests are generally intact.

GERMAN MERCHANT MARINE.

About thirty years ago Germany set about building up a strong merchant marine. Shipbuilding materials were allowed to come in free, and subsidies were granted until the lines got on their feet. The total net tonnage in December, 1890, was 1,433,413, while on Dec. 31, 1912, it was 3,133,724. There are seven German shipping companies which together have a total of 3,510,000 gross registered tons. Germany is the country of line traffic, her Hamburg-American Line "pool" being one of the most successful in the world. This company, at the beginning of 1913, embraced seventy-four regular steamship lines. It owned 192 ships, with a registered gross tonnage of 1,234,000. In 1911 the line carried 403,000 passengers and 7,990,000 tons of freight. In 1911 the North German Lloyd moved 614,000 passengers and 3,660,000 tons of freight. There is no part of the world where they have not connections. Is it any wonder that their commerce has attained to such immense proportions?

Next to banks and shipping, Germany's railroads are of interest. For the express purpose of fostering overseas trade, German state-owned roads have granted import and export rates far below the domestic rates. In addition to the regular export rates, through rates, joint rail and ocean, were granted for shipments from German cities to certain foreign markets which were even lower than the ordinary reduced rates. In 1913 the United States Consul General said on this subject:

"One of the most important factors in the development of Germany's foreign trade is the aid extended by the railways belonging to the various Federal States in giving reduced freight rates to the German shipping ports on goods coming from the interior and intended for export."

The following table shows the amount of Germany's trade with the chief warring nations in 1913:

	1913.
United Kingdom	$208,454,000	$342,298,000
Russia	330,055,000	209,486,000
France	188,906,000	167,998,000
United States	407,246,000	180,750,000

The great importance of Russia will be seen from an examination of this table. In this country, so near and guileless, the Germans have pursued an insidious policy of exploitation. German manufacturers have sent special salesmen not only to the large cities of Russia, but also to the provincial towns, with elaborate samples, and catalogues printed in colloquial Russian. Orders were encouraged by quoting prices in rubles, free on board Russian port or railway station. German banks have advanced money on the strength of orders taken, thus encouraging dealers to extend long credits.

ENGLAND'S TRADE.

Great Britain has long had the greatest merchant marine in the world, and while the Government is intensely interested, it has grown up, not as the result of subsidies, (which are confined to mail service,) but because of the progress of the individual British trader. According to Lloyd's Register for 1915-1916, the merchant fleet of Great Britain comprised nearly 9,000 steamers of more than 19,000,000 gross tons and more than 600 sailing vessels of about 300,000 gross tons. This does not include the shipping of the colonies.

The pound sterling reigns supreme in world commerce. No other nation has such a comprehensive financial organization for foreign business as has Great Britain. An enumeration of even the main branches would be tedious and confusing, hence I will confine myself to mentioning the classes of banks as they existed before the war:

1. London and provincial.
2. British colonial and foreign banks. Foreign trade interests.
3. Merchant bankers and acceptance houses.
4. A specialised group of banks for the financing of foreign trade.
5. Private and investment banks. Development schemes a specialty.
6. Foreign bank branches located in London.

At the close of 1910 the grand total of all securities in British hands for all foreign countries was about sixteen billions. The following table gives the main countries:

United States	$3,440,000,000
Germany	30,000,000
France	35,000,000
Argentina	1,340,000,000

From this it will be seen that the balance of investments are mainly in the less developed countries. Britain's actual investments within the German Empire are relatively small. The same with France. This is for the reason that those countries are old, and already exploited. It is in such new lands as Russia and the Argentine that large investments are made. Britain's relations with Germany are through commercial, not investing, mediums.

FRANCE'S TRADE.

France has fewer outstanding features. Though she holds foreign securities to the value of $8,000,000,000, and has a considerable foreign trade, she is of rather secondary importance in international economic relations. She has no strings of foreign banks as have England and Germany, and she is relatively more cautious about investments abroad. The Frenchman is thrifty and careful, not at all the type which ventures often and makes money.

RUSSIAN TRADE.

Russia has always been largely an agricultural nation with little manufacturing and comparatively little foreign trade. She has exchanged foodstuffs and some other raw materials for agricultural implements and railway materials from Germany, England, and the United States. Her tariff has of late years been high, and she has not, in general, encouraged commercial relations with other nations. Southern Russia, the Ukraine, is a large and rich agricultural region, exporting great quantities of beet sugar and wheat. It furnishes, in fact, one-third the grain of all Russia, five-sixths of the sugar, 60 per cent. of the iron and steel, 75 per cent. of the coal, and one-third of the cattle. Southern Siberia gives promise of being a fertile agricultural region when an enterprising population is settled upon it. Germany had been accustomed to make seasonal importation of Russian laborers for working in the beet fields, and she had relied on food from Russia, as well as from other undeveloped countries, to sustain her crowding industrial population.

Russia's importance after the war will not be as a manufacturing or as a commercial nation. She will probably be limited to furnishing raw materials, shipping out large quantities of staples and buying manufactured goods, both for consumption and development. She will tend to become exploited after the war rather than become an exploiter, and, of course, her Teutonic neighbors hope to exploit her.

EFFECTS OF THE WAR.

The war has been a cataclysm disrupting all peaceful relations. Commercial treaties have been abrogated, sources of supply cut off, new trade relations formed. At the beginning of the war our cotton exports fell off, and our gold poured into Europe. Then a reverse flood of orders came from Europe, for provisions, equipment, war supplies, and gold. The cutting off of our supply of mineral dyestuffs stimulated science and capital to new achievements; meanwhile, vegetable dyes regained prominence. We are now getting antimony from China, spelter from Australia, nitrate and iron ores from Chile, copper from Peru, and tin from Bolivia in previously unheard of quantities.

Investments were demoralized. Before the war the rate of foreign investment in this country by the countries of Western Europe was at least $1,500,000,000 per annum. This stopped, for capital was needed in making war supplies. The United States experienced a withdrawal of foreign capital, but this was made up to us by the increased receipts of abnormal war trade.

RELATIONS AFTER THE WAR.

The consideration of post-war relations must naturally be prefaced with an account of the extent to which goods and properties of all kinds have been destroyed during the war. A complete survey is impossible, since most important territories are still under German occupation. Strict censorship has prevented much reliable information reaching this country, but by consulting the files of The London Times, The New York Times, and the Berliner Tageblatt, we can piece together some account of the situation. Germany, in Eastern Prussia, and Austria in Poland and Galicia, have already done much to repair the damage. The Central Powers, the indications are, will have to rebuild from out of their own resources; the assistance of the United States will be asked chiefly in helping Belgium and Northeastern France, though it is expected that Germany will be made to pay the bill.

The destruction of property was brought about (1) by actual fighting; (2) deterioration in consequence of disuse.

The first cause, while the more obvious, is rivaled in importance by the second, which is of more consequence the longer the war continues. Great destruction resulted when Germany occupied the thickly populated industrial regions of Belgium. After this occupation German troops entered France in two lines. When she penetrated almost to Paris and was then thrown back in a series of destructive battles heavy destruction of property occurred, including such cities as Arras, Amiens, Rheims, &c. The area of France fought over contains more than 3,000 cities, villages, and hamlets. It is a narrow strip running from the coast to Verdun, and further on to points across the German frontier.

In the eastern theatre of war East Prussia suffered much at the war's beginning, mostly through destruction of agricultural property. Poland was fought over twice. Galicia endured heavy destruction in public and private property. Destruction in the Balkans took the form of agricultural losses. Up to January, 1917, the total destruction of private and public property is estimated to be as follows:

Western theatre of war	$3,735,000,000
Eastern theatre of war	2,250,000,000
Total	$5,985,000,000

The American Industrial Commission which went to France in 1916 reported, on the basis of official French figures, that 733 towns had been destroyed and that 330 mills and factories had been incapacitated, thus throwing out of work about 58,000 workmen. Five million acres were at that time in the hands of the Germans, as well as four cities of more than 100,000 population, namely, Lille, Roubaix, Nancy, and Rheims. In all of this region the population is twice as dense as the average in France. In 1912 $50,000,000 worth of cereals were grown in this vicinity. The textile production of Roubaix alone amounted, before the war, to $300,000,000. The importance of the invaded lands may be seen from the fact that they normally produce two-thirds of the coal of France, 8 per cent. of the iron ore of the nation, and agricultural products valued at a billion dollars.

RECONSTRUCTION IN FRANCE.

The New York Times of Jan. 3, 1917, said: "Plans for the reconstruction of Northern France after the war worked out by a French Cabinet committee and outlined in official reports received here embrace a carefully prepared program for the restoration of normal conditions immediately after peace is declared. * * * Provisions are included for the return of refugees to the enemy-occupied territory as soon as possible. * * * A central labor bureau has been established in Paris to estimate the labor demand and supply. Prefects in the invaded districts have been provided with funds to purchase agricultural machinery."

This is in accord with the report of the Industrial Commission, which stated that the relief work was being carried on under Government supervision. Early in the war France set aside three hundred million francs for immediate relief, and to carry out the plans Prefects are invited to co-operate, and are in turn promised a free hand in relief measures.

The ravaged areas of Belgium constitute one of the most important industrial parts of the world. They contain large coal deposits, textile mills, smelting furnaces, and steel mills.

The Germans have made an official report of the destruction of property in Belgium and Northern France, but this report is not obtainable in this country. A report made by a French commission, however, says, under date of Dec. 22, 1916:

The investigation was carried out in the following departments: Nord, Pas de Calais, Somme, Oise, Seine et Marne, Aisne, Ardennes, Marne, Meuse, Meurthe et Mosselles, Vosges. From the operations were perforce excluded two hundred and fifty evacuated communes in the army zone of twenty-five hundred communes still occupied by the enemy. The figures are as follows:

	Cubic Yds.
Total masonry destroyed	4,680,000
Stone	2,080,000
Bricks	542,000,000
Lime (tons)	297,000
Sand	1,348,000
Copper work	513,360
Timber	891,560
Joinery	195,000
Iron framework (tons)	27,300
Bolts, locks, &c., (tons)	5,000

English sources report the following damage: Lille suffered from bombardment, 882 buildings destroyed, 1,500 damaged; Rheims bombarded, &c. Hundreds of bridges destroyed. In French Lorraine fifty villages have been destroyed. The wool-combing establishments of Rheims are wiped out. During February, 1915, the Central Committee for the Agricultural Restoration of Belgium and Northeastern France in London estimated the total loss of agriculture in Belgium at $280,000,000. Loss to France about the same. In March, 1915, the French Government estimated the approximate destruction of farmhouse property at more than 100,000 houses, without giving a value. Billiard in "La Belgique Industrielle et Commercial de France" of Dec. 15, 1914, states the loss of Belgium at $5,000,000,000.

A German economist, however, gives $1,000,000,000 as the probable loss to Belgium.

To sum up, the total loss of agricultural, Governmental, and city property in France was up to a year ago about $1,080,000,000; to Belgium about $2,055,000,000. The loss in machinery to France up to a year ago was $530,000,000; to Belgium $800,000,000.

AN IMPOVERISHED WORLD.

All this destruction means that the world will be impoverished when peace comes; there will be tremendous competition for capital and labor; markets will be competed for, and every nation on the face of the earth will be trying to recoup by developing economic resources of all kinds. Arthur Henderson of England, says: "Trade policy after the war must not be founded on the economic oppression or commercial isolation of the German people." Lord Robert Cecil said in the House of Commons: "I am no advocate nor do I believe that any member of the Government is an advocate of what is called an economic war after the war." Last January Lloyd George added to this, "Owing to the diversion of human effort to warlike pursuits there must follow a shortage of materials * * * but this should not lead to economic war." President Wilson's dictum of "No war after the war" is in keeping with these sentiments. On Oct. 21, 1916, the Russian Government expressed similar ideas, and on July 19, 1917, the German Reichstag rejected all plans aimed at an economic blockade and the stirring up of enmity among peoples after the war."

It would be a mistake for the Allies to plan economic extinctions after the war. History shows that artificial restraints of trade are of little avail, and I venture to predict that trade will revert to its old pre-war channels, more or less. The commercial relations between the United States and England were about the same after the Revolutionary War as they were before, and in the first part of the past century France found that she could not compete with England in procuring American trade, simply because the economic advantages were with England.

While it is not likely that Germany will be able to wage a successful economic war when peace comes there are plenty of Germans who favor just this thing. Franz Koehler, in his book called "The New Triple Alliance," says: "It will be the principal aim of this combination to regulate offerings and demand between the individual countries according to their mutual needs and interest. * * * The demand for breadstuffs, satisfied until now by Russian and American imports, will have to be filled by the newly acquired Eastern countries and also by Turkey. * * * Egypt and Turkey can grow cotton. Copper will be found to some extent in Turkey and Serbia."

This book aims at turning Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey, and Bulgaria into an economic unit, self-sufficing and independent. Another German, F. Neumann, favors a Teuto-Austrian alliance and "closer co-operation of Kartels, insurance companies, banks, &c." But a truer note is struck by Dr. Gustav Stolper of Vienna when he says:

"A system of interdependence between ourselves and our allies is impossible. A growth of one and a half billion marks in trade within the union would not free us from the necessity for regaining international custom, amounting to eight and a half milliards. Furthermore, merely to win back this would not suffice to ease the financial burden left by the war. * * * There is no doubt that we must place the fruits of our industry in ever-increasing volume on the world's markets, and our allies will need to do the same. The idea of a self-sufficient Central European union is fallacious."

It is realized, however, that all nations must reorganize their forces so as to help their international trade. This movement is most noticeable in England, the land of free traders and individualism, where, until now, the Government has maintained a policy of noninterference with commerce. The English Board of Trade is reorganizing into two branches, the first to deal with commerce and industry, and the second, to serve the public. This latter branch will furnish direct aid to British trade and commerce, in the effort to retain for Britain, in the face of the superhuman efforts which Germany is going to make, a large share of her pre-war trade. A Parliamentary Committee dealing with the subject recognizes the necessity for better trade relations with neutrals and allies, and adds, "It is also essential that home industries should be developed and the empire made self-supporting." It concludes that "it is premature, however, to formulate a definite scheme of tariffs."

As for Germany, she will undoubtedly make a "bee line" for export trade after the war. The Allies will be prejudiced, but she must overcome that. Neutral countries will, however, be more ardently sought after because of this antipathy. At the present time German overseas commerce is reduced to practically nothing, but German exporters are trying to keep in touch with markets. German writers are urging extension in the East, since China and the Levant are practically undeveloped as yet. The German Levant banks are already there, and will help after the war. The Kartel movement, which began about 1875, and culminated in 385 Kartels in 1904 will probably be further developed. But though some of our plate glass companies have stated that Germany is getting ready to "dump" large quantities of glass on us after the war, it is very unlikely that either capital or labor will be so plentiful as to allow production to get to the point where "dumping" would be likely.

Germany's possession is being strengthened by her seizures of Poland, Belgium, France, and Ukraine. In Belgium and France she has destroyed property which the French will later on have to build up at an enormous expense, and in Ukraine she has carved out for herself the choicest bit of Russia. From Rumania, Germany has also obtained valuable acquisitions, as may be seen from the following statement made in a dispatch from the official Wolff Bureau, dated Berlin, and published in the German newspapers of Jan. 30. Apparently the dispatch was sent out to meet misleading reports regarding the available supplies from the occupied portions of Rumania and Italy:

"From Rumania since the occupation Germany has received six hundred and thirty thousand, and Austria-Hungary seven hundred and fifty-six thousand tons of grain, including corn. For the correct appreciation of these figures it is necessary to consider that the ratio of population of Germany and Austria-Hungary is as seven to five, and that in peace times Germany must import 5,500,000 tons of grain, including corn, while Austria-Hungary has no imports worth mentioning of these articles."

RECONSTRUCTION.

Peace will bring a period of temporary unemployment in England, France, Russia, and Germany, unless the Governments assist industrial enterprises, and keep the soldiers at work in them. Industries, dependent on private capital will not be able to start up in full swing immediately.

The quick recovery of France after the Franco-Prussian war testified to the recuperative power of the nation, but that war was far less exhausting than the present one. It lasted less than a year and the engines of material destruction were not nearly so well developed then as now. Perhaps a better parallel is the economic ruin of the South made by the civil war, from which the recovery was so slow.

France and Belgium will have to look to outside help. Slates, brick, and mineral builders' supplies may be supplied locally, but three-quarters of the timber used must be imported. The Industrial Commission to France states that "America must become an important factor in European reconstruction after the war. The United States will be the chief source from which the things needed can be supplied." And they will, doubtless, have to be supplied on credit, since the ruined countries will have little to exchange for the things they need immediately. The great wealth accumulated in our country up to the war, which enabled us to absorb two or three billions of securities sent from Europe in 1914-1917, and thus transform ourselves from a debtor to a creditor nation, can be applied in no better way than in helping its rehabilitation. Our millions of soldiers in France cannot be returned all at once at the conclusion of peace, and while they remain, it is to be hoped that they can lend their aid in the task of rebuilding. The vast amount of industrial equipment which we have sent to France to supply our army, the railroads, warehouses, and even factories, will probably never be returned, but will be sold to the French or Belgian people on credit for their own use after the war.

LUXURIES WILL DECREASE.

In conclusion, the nations up to 1914 had been weaving themselves into a close economic relationship. World markets had been established, and the territorial division of labor was so far and so well carried out that all the great nations of the world found themselves interdependent. The war has brought home this interdependence to all of us, but it has also dislocated all manner of connections, so much so that the new connections, when formed, may be substantially different. So great a destruction of productive resources has been accomplished that the peoples of the world must live on a narrower margin of comforts and luxuries than they were accustomed to in 1914, before they can take up, where they left off, the conquest of nature.

Many of the statistics in the foregoing statements have materially changed since the date they were obtained, particularly those relating to war expenditures by the different nations. This article is based, as nearly as possible, on conditions and figures obtainable about March 1, and will show how rapidly the indebtedness of the nations has increased—based upon present figures obtainable.

The nations of the earth will compete with each other, as never before, for commercial supremacy, and the "survival of the fittest" must play its part for future generations, but I feel sure that the United States, with its history, past and present, of showing its willingness to not only help the peoples of the United States but those of all other nations, will take its place in the front rank of honest competition and, by its financial strength, man power, and brains, lead the world in the success of commerce and industry.

Ask the Garage Man—He Knows

ASK ANY GARAGE MAN—those who do not also sell automobiles—about the various makes of motor cars and motor trucks.

ASK HIM WHICH ones come to him most—which least often.

HE'LL TELL YOU TRUE for it is a strange fact that though you'd expect him to be partial to those that come oftenest and run up the biggest repair bills, as a matter of fact his attitude is just the opposite.

HE LIKES THE KIND that, being well made and accessible, are soon out of the shop with a reasonable bill for adjustment or repairs—and a satisfied customer.

THE OTHER KIND cause frequent wrangles and endless enmities—in other words, they come once, stay over long, leave in an unsatisfactory condition and seldom return.

SO HE DOESN'T like those cars.

HE LIKES REOS—never heard of a garage owner or foreman that wasn't a warm friend of Reo's.

EVEN WHEN HE DOES sell some rival make of automobile or motor truck, he will admit, if you ask him, that Reo is "next best" to the one he sells.

ASK SEVERAL such agents and you'll find that, almost without exception, Reo is "next best"—and putting the replies all together you have the answer.

ANY MECHANIC in any garage will tell you that the Reo is the most accessible car he has ever worked on.

HE'LL TELL YOU—for this is a point that your garage man considers of the utmost importance—that Reo cars have the best bearings at every point ever put into a car or truck.

WE COULD go into details and explain why this is so but space forbids. Besides, we are suggesting that you ask an impartial judge—one who knows. He will tell you in more convincing—and more forcible garage language why Reos stand up—why the mechanic likes them and why the upkeep is so low.

MILITARY CRITIC'S REVIEW

Delay Between German Attacks May Be Due to Discord Among Kaiser's Generals—Offensive, If Resumed, Must Be on Same Costly Scale to Assailants.

BY A MILITARY EXPERT.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

ANOTHER week has passed and the anticipated German offensive has still not developed. In fact, except for a continuation of minor movements, there has been not the slightest change in the military situation.

It is somewhat difficult to understand just why the Germans have delayed their attack for so long. We can understand why the interim between successive attacks in the case of Germany is greater than in the case of the Allies. We can understand, too, why this has particular application to the present offensive. But we cannot understand why it has taken so long to get in action.

The method of attack of the Allies has been developed with the idea of economizing in human life. The whole plan revolves about the idea of accomplishing a given object with as little loss as possible. For this reason the Allies have limited all of their attacks to a specific and generally local object in each case, trusting to the accumulation of such efforts to produce a final result. Thus we saw in the battle of the Somme no attempt to break through, no attempt to turn and roll up the German Army at one blow. There was a definite line set for the end of the day's work, which line was well within range of the artillery as it was then placed. This line was smothered in artillery fire, and when it had been hammered to pieces the infantry was sent over. There was no effort to do more except in individual cases where the opportunity presented was unusually good.

ALLIED ATTACKS FREQUENT.

This process was continued, the object to be gained seldom being more than a mile in advance of the attacking line. The result was that it was not very long between attacks, two such attacks often coming in a week. But always there was this in view: Sooner or later, by this method of gradual penetration into the German lines, there must come a time when some necessary life line would be cut, in which case the German line would have to be withdrawn. It was the threat of such a contingency that forced the German retreat in 1917.

The period of preparation between these attacks was short. There was no need for elaborate preparations. They had already been made before the battle began. There was no regrouping of armies or of divisions. There were cases, of course, and these were very frequent, when a division would be sent to some quiet sector of the line to recuperate and rest after a particularly strenuous time. But, in general, there was no regrouping of forces.

The same general plan was followed by the Germans in the battle of Verdun. Their initial attack was possibly made with the hope of overwhelming the French and of driving them back upon the Meuse. But when the first grand rush was over, the battle became a battle of limited objectives. In attacks of this kind the Germans have not proved to be of the same quality as the Allies either in the attack or the defense. With all their defensive strength in materials and positions, they have never held against the Allies as did the French at Verdun, or as have the British and French in the present theatre once the retreat came to a halt. Moreover, they have not proved nearly so successful in attacks for limited objectives. At Verdun, for example, after the middle of April, the battle was over and the French had won it, although severe fighting occurred until the first of July, when the battle of the Somme opened.

In the present battle the Germans have tried the same methods that they used against Russia and Rumania, which, in view of the fact that all of the battles were planned by the same man, Ludendorff, is entirely reasonable. In fact, it is now reported that the active field command is also to be given to the man who was so successful in Russia and Rumania—Mackensen. The method was to overwhelm the defense with a single tremendous blow, regardless of losses sustained, and to overrun the foe's troops while they were in defeat. There was reason behind this method. Germany cannot afford to delay. The American troops are fast going to France and the numbers are approaching a point where they constitute a menace to German interests. The longer the delay, the more of them will be sent over. In addition, the shipping situation is ever improving, and this means not increased food alone for the Allies, which, after all, does not make so very much difference to Germany, but increased munitions and war materials. Therefore, Germany figured that a single great blow, followed up rapidly so that the demoralization which it caused could not be remedied because of the speed of the advance, was the only method calculated to produce victory.

All hope was based on this method. We have seen how near it came to succeeding. Germany lost as many men as she calculated she could afford to lose, perhaps more, and the effort was halted, and definitely halted. Then there was no question of the offensive developing into a series of short, sharp blows. There was no more opportunity for such a long-drawn-out operation than there was when the attack first began. The necessity for a decisive blow still existed for the same reason as before. This could not be gained by delayed tactics, such as would mark the more familiar processes. Germany, therefore, continued to pursue the plan of winning the war, or attempting to win it, by means of several tremendous blows, delivered on a wide front, with all the resources at her command.

There were a number of problems to be solved. The infantry and field artillery had outraced the heavy artillery. The accumulations of artillery in the form of ammunition dumps had been left far behind. Many of the divisions had been very roughly handled. The divisions which had been engaged in the attacks on Arras and in the fighting against Kemmel Hill and Messines Ridge, in fact against all of this northern section of the line, had been literally cut to pieces. Many vital and time-consuming changes were necessary. Divisions in some cases had to be withdrawn completely and sent to some relatively quiet sections of the front. Others had to be refitted and reinforced, and the gaps filled up from reserve depots. Others again had to be rested. Armies had to be regrouped. In fact, the problems which confronted Germany were exactly those which she had to contend with when she began her preparations for the first great blow. This had to be done if the second was to be like the first and if an equal success was to be hoped for.

TWO GERMAN THEORIES.

There are probably other causes in addition, as these alone would not seem to have involved the long wait which has ensued since the fighting has stopped. There is rumored disagreement with the German high command. It is not by any means a secret that there have been two schools in Germany, one devoted to a certain style of fighting evolved from experience on the eastern front, a school which from long association has become thoroughly imbued with eastern ideas and which has advocated refraining from excessive activity in the west while the east was in a process of absorption. The other school has leaned entirely westward, has advocated what it considers methods applicable peculiarly to western conditions, and has, from the beginning, urged a western offensive. Between the two there has been no common ground, only endless discussion and failure to agree. Again, there is the question of the punishment the Germans received in their first effort. This was undoubtedly severe. It may have been and probably was exaggerated in a number of quarters. At the same time, it was bad enough without any exaggeration. Germany cannot fail to figure, as any other nation in arms must figure, that to reach a given point, to take a given objective, even to win a war itself, is worth a certain number of men and no more. Every objective, great and small, has its price which is measured in casualties. What would it profit any army, for example, to win a war if, in doing so, it destroyed the nation, if its victory were a Pyrrhic victory?

For Germany to reach the sea at Abbéville is worth a definite number of men and no more, and this number can be definitely fixed by the number that must remain in order that advantage may be taken of the favorable situation in which the German Army would then find itself. There must be enough, supposing this unlikely contingency, for the Germans to hold fast in check along the Somme either the French or the British, and to turn their full force, except those needed in the defense, against one or the other foe and defeat him. Otherwise, to reach the sea would be a fruitless victory. Following this line of reasoning through, it was worth a certain number of men to reach the present positions, it will be worth a certain number more to take Amiens, to force the Arras defenses, and to break down the resistance from Kemmel Hill to Mont des Cats, the latter place being the western extremity of the line of hills of which Kemmel is the most eastern. What this number is, of course, is in every case dependent on the surrounding circumstances, and in any event is largely a matter of opinion with the high command.

GERMAN SCHEDULE FAILED.

We know that this command had definite plans as to the limit of the offensive. We know that the whole attack was worked out on a schedule, and that at a certain time it was planned to be at a certain place. We know, further, that this schedule was never kept. And, at the last moment, the entire offensive was stopped in spite of the most determined efforts.

It was not a question of endeavoring to save men. Men were thrown in until it seemed that there was no end to them. For days the slaughter was terrific while the Germans attempted to carry their schedule through. But, in spite of the rate at which they used up their forces, they were completely beaten. Under these circumstances, we may be sure beyond possibility of doubt that the losses inflicted were far in excess of those expected at the beginning of the attack, otherwise the attack would be going on yet. Here we have another reason for the delay, inasmuch as this condition necessitates greater changes and much more elaborate shifts of divisions and parts of divisions in order to bring the new attacking forces up to the strength of the old.

And it will not do for these attacking divisions to be either less in number or numerically weaker than they were on March 21. The problem is not the same by any means. In every way the Germans will have more difficulties and greater opposition to contend with.

In spite of this opposition, there can be but little doubt that a certain amount of territory will be gained. This is inevitable. The Germans will be in tremendous strength in both men and guns. The allied defense, by the very reason of its elasticity, will be forced to give ground somewhere. It is unreasonable to expect otherwise. But even though the Germans did go so far in their last effort, they were checked when it seemed that there was every reason to fear their final success. They will, therefore, be stopped again, and when this happens we may look to an end to the present offensive.

LOCAL FIGHTING OF THE WEEK.

As to the local operations during the last week little need be said. In every case these operations have gone ahead with all of the accompaniments of a major action. There has been, for example, the greatest aerial activity; it is doubtful if there has ever been a time in the war when such activity has been sustained for so long a time. There have been, too, heavy artillery bombardments both against the front lines and the lines in the rear, and bombardments with gas shells against artillery positions. All that has resulted from this has been small attacks. First, the French improved their positions about Locre—a vital section, it may be noted, since upon its retention hangs the continued possession of the heights of Scherpenberg and Mont Rouge. Then the Australians pushed ahead along the Ancre and improved their positions on the plateau of Morlancourt.

There have been also a number of trench raids, some of which succeeded and others of which never even came to close quarters. The net result of all this has been small.

ABOUT HOUSTON AND GALVESTON, TEXAS

BUT for Southern courtesy there might have been in these last dozen years another of those twin city rivalries that at various times in a half century have furnished amusement for the American people. But between Houston and Galveston, down in Texas, there has never been anything but the greatest mutual consideration and brotherly love. Although near neighbors and commercial and industrial rivals, it has been constantly between the two cities a case of "After you, Alphonse!" and "My Dear Gaston!" Even now, when Houston has forged so far ahead of Galveston in population, wealth, enterprise, and commercial influence that the latter city is hopelessly distanced, you have to journey to Texas to learn that not Galveston, as people in the North still think, but Houston, is the most important city in the Lone Star State.

In the last ten years Houston has doubled its population and now has 160,000, four times that of Galveston, which has stood still. Like spokes of a wheel, seventeen railroads radiate from Houston, making it a receiving and distributing centre and connecting it directly with the important cities of the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard, the Middle West, and Mexico. A ship channel has just been completed, fifty miles in length, connecting Houston with the Gulf and making the city an ocean port.

The expense of the channel, $8,000,000 up to the present time, has been borne in part by the Federal Government and in part by the city. Since it offers to all except very large ships harbor and wharf facilities free from the menace of storms, its opening strikes the final blow to the one-time supremacy of Galveston. At present vessels of twenty-five foot draft can use the channel and the wharves, owned and operated by the city, but the depth is being rapidly increased to thirty-two feet, with the expectation of making the channel still deeper should it become necessary.

Houston's growth appears to have been caused by a tide of population and capital which began setting into it from various quarters of the North, the East, and Middle West about that time. And no Texans are more enthusiastic than these people who have been there anywhere from two or three to a dozen years. Any one of them will tell you with enthusiasm what a great State Texas is, how much cotton and corn and rice and peanuts and tobacco she raises, about her pine forests in East Texas, her citrus belt along the Gulf coast, her Winter strawberry and vegetable crop, her immense stretches of land still waiting for the farmer to turn the virgin prairie sod, her tremendous water power, of which only the merest fraction has thus far been utilized. And the visitor will experience for himself how native courtesy, or the soft and gentle climate, or inherited and diffused disposition has mellowed the nature of the people, newcomers and all, into the most charming and delightful affability, kindness, and hospitality.

MILITARY TRAINING FOR SCHOOLBOYS

THE War Department has not yet worked out in detail its plan for instituting military training in colleges throughout the country, as a war activity supplementary to the camps of the national army. In the interval of waiting, however, the Government is encouraging military activities in various schools and colleges.

An instance of this semi-official proposition of boys and young men for army life is found near Pottstown, Penn., where a camp of the Hill School is to run all through the Summer months, with the sanction of the authorities at Washington. An active army officer has been detailed as Commandant by the War Department, and both the British and French Military Missions have promised to detail officers now on leave in this country. In the camp last Summer 125 cadets were enrolled, and this year's registration is expected to be larger. The age period is from 16 to 21 years.

SANITATION WORK AT CAMP DIX

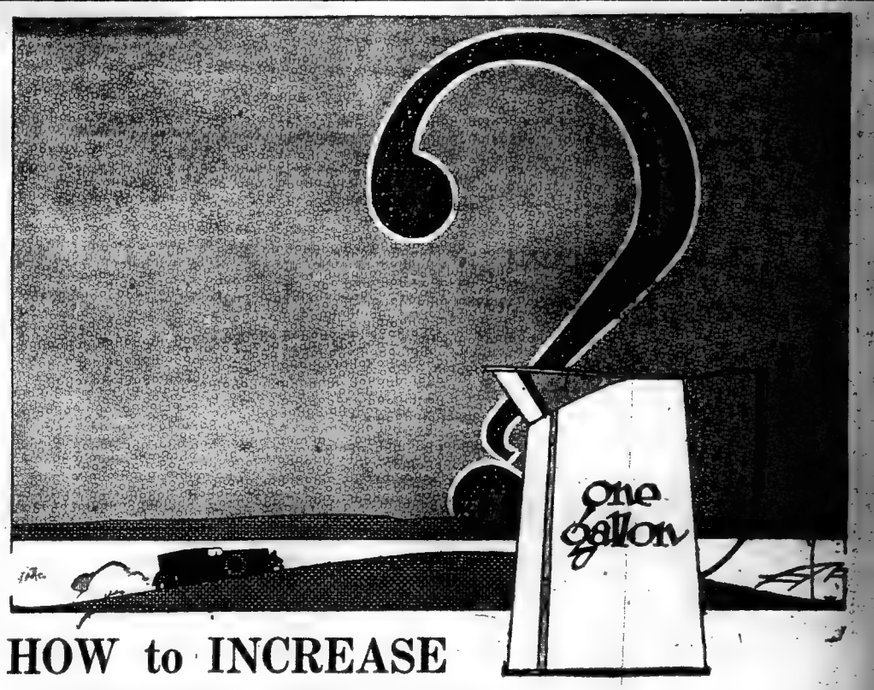
PROBLEMS of sanitation at the national army cantonments have been no less important than military training. The officers at Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., even admit that the health work is the most important of their activities, and they are not reluctant to boast about what they have accomplished under the direction of Major Gen. Hugh L. Scott in transforming the none too wholesome area into a model of what a camp should be.

Except for one or two macadam roads built within the military reservation, the highways of the camps in January and February were muddy up to the hubs of the heavy army trucks. General Scott brought to the task of speeding up transportation the common sense of a practical soldier, if not the technique of an engineer, and under his orders ditches and drags soon put the roads in passable condition. Many a supply officer has found out to his joy that General Scott can fight mud as well as Indians.

Pools of water, breeders of flies and mosquitos, were numerous. Particularly in the relatively low areas of the base hospital and artillery and engineer regiments was there an accumulation of surface water. But the pools are there no longer.

"Interior police" received the same attention as the clean-up on the outside, and soon even dust under a stove was hard to find. The camp became not only clean, but ornate. The pioneer in deporation was Major Kelly of the 309d Field Signal Battalion, who found sod on the outskirts of the reservation and transplanted it about the barracks of his command. Low birch fences of a pleasing design confined the stretches of green, and the battalion area leaped into fame as "Kelly Field." Other organizations followed the example of beautifying the surroundings.

A wideawake staff officer found two expert gardeners who had been enlisted through local draft boards, and the spare time of these men was devoted to headquarters, where a fine lawn took the place of the furrows where one-time farmers formerly grew their crops of grain and corn.



HOW to INCREASE GASOLINE MILEAGE

HOW many miles per gallon? That's the question motorists most frequently ask each other.

In the case of any given car the answer lies in the quality of the gasoline. The leaner the mixture that will work effectively the smaller the waste of fuel, and hence the greater number of miles per gallon.

Tydol, the gasoline that vaporizes fast, works best with the carburetor set at the ratio of 1 part fuel to 15 parts air.

Because Tydol vaporizes fast and burns clean, with a quick, hot explosion, every drop of it is converted into power.

Every day the number of New York dealers handling Tydol increases. Look for the orange and black sign they display.

Veedol lubricants resist heat, thus reduce friction, sediment and wear; increase power and gasoline mileage.

The distinctive body design of this Moon Six-66 Club Roadster appeals particularly to the owner-driver. There is a neighborly arrangement of seats which provides ample room for four passengers.

The body is upholstered, in the usual Moon style, with Spanish leather. The divided front seat gives easy access to the rear, and it is possible without leaving the car to gain the rear seat through the aisle.

The car responds so easily and runs so smoothly that it is a favorite with women who like to drive. Your pride in its ownership will come from the feeling that it is unmistakably "high-priced" in all but actual cost.

SCENIC MOTOR TOUR FOR THE WEEK-END

Pleasant Run for Holiday Outing to Delaware Water Gap Through Picturesque Mountain Country

A pleasant week-end tour for motorists who may be able to take advantage of the Decoration Day holiday next Thursday for a brief outing is suggested to Shawnee and the Delaware Water Gap by the Bureau of Tours of the Automobile Club of America. Traversing the Ramapo Valley, Rockland and Orange Counties, the route leads through some of the most picturesque country in the vicinity of New York west of the Hudson River.

Crossing the Fort Lee Ferry, the Shore Road up Fort Lee hill leads to Fort Lee, continuing to Leonia, Bogota and Hackensack, where a right turn is made into Main Street, crossing the railroad at the station, and just beyond a left turn is made into Passaic Street, continuing through Arcola, then along the Paramus Road and northwest through Rochelle, Allendale and Mahwah to Suffern, just over the New York State line, thirty miles from New York City.

The scenic Ramapo Valley is then traversed through Ramapo Village and Stoneburg to Tuxedo, at the foothills of the Ramapo Mountains. Northward through Southfield, where an excellent new road for Bear Mountain branches off, the route proceeds through Arden in Harriman's wooded valley and on to Monroe, Chester, and Goshen. From there on the Slate Hill Road is followed, which is fair going to Port Jervis. On reaching the summit of Slate Hill the Delaware Valley can be seen for thirty miles.

Map Prepared by Automobile Club of America.

Crossing the Delaware River, the motorist enters Pennsylvania at Matamoras, where a left turn is made and the scenic river road followed south through Pike County and Monroe County to Shawnee and the Delaware Water Gap, 128 miles from New York City.

The section of the route between Port Jervis and the Water Gap, traversing the Delaware Valley, is deservedly famous. A fine road runs along the river at the foot of verdure-clad bluffs amid delightful scenery. Numerous picturesque falls and gorges are formed by rivulets descending to the Delaware from the foothills of the Alleghanies, here known as the Pocono Mountains. At Milford a quaint old-fashioned village near the mouth of the Sawkills, Milford Falls, may be visited, while from the 800-foot eminence of Otter's Cliff, just south of the village, fine views of the valley are obtained, with the Kittatinny Mountains rising sharply to the southwest. Dingman's Ferry, a picturesque spot, is passed for Egypt Mills, which has long been a famous haunt of fishermen, while Bushkill, at the curious bend of the river known as Wallpack Bend, or "Fiddler's Elbow," possesses the most beautiful waterfall in the district.

Just below Bushkill the road branches to the left, running through Shawnee, the home of the Golf Club, then on to the Delaware Water Gap, where the river forces its way through the Kittatinny or Blue Mountains, is a narrow gorge about two miles long, with rocky sides 1,500 feet high, so narrow as to leave barely room for the river and the road. Two bold bluffs, Mount Tammany, in New Jersey, and Mount Minsi, in the Keystone State, stand like giant sentinels guarding the gateway through the hills and command extensive views of the valley and adjacent mountains. A number of attractive excursions may be made on foot amid the glens and valleys of the nearby mountains, while such beauty spots as Deer Park and Cherry Valley, Buttermilk Falls, the Falls of Wenona and Castle Rock are within a pleasant drive.

The return route may be made by running south from the Water Gap through Portland to the new iron bridge, which crosses the Delaware River to the little town of Delaware. From there to Bridgeville, a distance of about five miles, the road is quite rough and worn. On reaching Bridgeville a good macadam road is followed through Butlerville to Hackettstown.

On leaving Hackettstown, the Schooley Mountain is crossed, the road being in fair condition to Chester. From there on the balance of the tour traverses a good macadam road through Mendham, Morristown, Madison and Chatham to Springfield, returning via Springfield Avenue, through Newark and the Plank Road and Hudson County Boulevard to New York.

Road Conditions to Boston.

The Post Road to Boston via New Haven, Hartford, Springfield, and Worcester averages very good, says the current issue of Motor Travel. There are but few sections where road work is likely to be found, and even there slight inconvenience would be given, such as on the Berlin Turnpike, shortly before entering Hartford, and on both sides of the Connecticut River between Hartford and Springfield.

The shore route from New Haven through New London and Westerly to Providence averages very good except for a short stretch north of Narragansett Pier, where a rather poor detour is necessary.

AUTO TRADE NOTES.

Eugene V. Lewis has resigned as Vice President and Director of the Timken-Detroit Axle Company of Detroit to take up Government war work. Vice President A. R. Demory will be General Manager, Secretary Frederick C. Gilbert has been elected a Vice President in charge of sales and advertising, and Treasurer C. W. Dickerson will act as Secretary.

The Packard Motor Car Company of Pittsburgh recently delivered to the Carbon Steel Company of that city a twin six limousine, to be used in carrying the officials to New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Washington, and Buffalo. With the railroads cutting down their passenger service, something for immediate passenger service was needed.

James J. Hunt, Manager of the Reo Motor Car Company of New York, has returned from the factory at Lansing, Mich., where he made arrangements for delivery of a number of the new Reo commercial wagons, available for loads under one ton.

The Paige Company furnishes the interesting information that Dr. S. W. Edwins of Elwood, Ind., 97 years old, and known as the oldest man in the State of Indiana, has just purchased a Paige car and proposes to be his own driver.

New offices have been opened by the Indian Refining Company, manufacturers of Mayflies oil, at 246 Madison Avenue, occupying three floors.

An increased demand for individuality in body colors has been noticed among Cadillac buyers, according to Sales Manager E. C. Stevens. Belgian blue, one of the new colors, has been in great demand for the two and four passenger cars.

C. T. Silver, Kissel Kar distributer, states that the same oaths which is lavished on the more delicate parts of the automobile should be applied to the brakes. They should be set so that the wheels will hold to the ground without skidding.

"The new Dort Foursesson Coupe won public favor so quickly that the scheduled production of the factory for the year was exhausted in a few months," says F. W. Wright, local distributer.

The Pickling Enameling Company has been succeeded by a larger organization, with W. Irvine Fickling as President, known as the Enameling and Stamping Corporation, with $500,000 capital, and headquarters at Second and Webster Avenues, Long Island City. H. F. Holbrook is Secretary and Treasurer.

An automotive and accessories exposition will be held on the Municipal Pier of Chicago, Sept. 14 to 21.

H. C. Ostermann, Field Secretary of the Lincoln Highway Association, left Detroit May 2 on his seventeenth transcontinental automobile drive over the Lincoln Highway, using a Packard twin six touring car.

The Kaufmann-Morris Company, Inc., distributers of Nash cars and trucks and Premier and Fiat passenger cars, has been reorganized. A. G. Kaufmann remains President and F. C. Sigwerz is General Manager.

J. E. Hulett, President of the Brady-Murray Motors Corporation, believes that no excessive demands for motor curtailment will be made by the Government. The industry, he says, will voluntarily curtail its output 50 per cent.

The Cott-Stratton Company, New York dealers in Dodge Brothers cars, has, for the last year, conducted an investigation department, whose duty is to see if any owner of a Dodge Brothers car is unnecessarily wasting gasoline. Every owner is called on twice a year, when the car's record is taken and the difficulties are straightened out.

FRENCH MOTOR ECONOMY.

Gasoline Shortage—Truck Driveways from Seaports to the Front.

"While the French Army is not hampered by shortage of gasoline, it is economizing in many ways, writes W. F. Bradley of Paris to R. D. Chapin, Chairman of the Highways Transport Committee of the Council of National Defense.

"We have comparatively little gas," he says, "and the shortage is going to be so acute, even after the war, that we shall have to take up the question of production of benzol and alcohol on a very big scale as soon as possible. Because of this deficiency it has been necessary to study economy.

"Since early in 1915 we have been having driveaways on a big scale from the Channel and Atlantic ports to Paris and from Paris to the front; also from the Italian factories to the French front. The park at Lyons receives trucks from the local and Italian factories. When truck trains are being made up an announcement is placed in the local papers and civilians can deliver loads at the park. These loads are carried by the army trucks and can be dropped at two or three towns en route or taken through to the park at Paris. This has proved a first-class scheme.

"Another plan, particularly between Atlantic ports and the front, is to load a touring car aboard a truck. This is being done by the American forces. Economies are also being made by an extensive use of trailers, particularly two-wheelers.

"It is a general rule that when empty trucks are to be moved short distances they shall not be run under their own power, but one truck shall tow two, three, and sometimes four others. At some parks it is not uncommon for oxen to be used to haul trucks about when making up columns.

"The French authorities are alive to the fact that roads must be kept in repair. Traffic has increased enormously in many manufacturing and military centres, but shortage of labor has made it impossible to give as much care to the roads as before the war. Toward the front there has been an important increase of new roads, and others have been wonderfully improved.

"It is estimated that after the war the number of automobiles in France will increase 100 per cent. This estimate appears to be quite moderate."

Export Plan for Standard Tires.

The Export Committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, of which J. Walter Drake is Chairman, approves the tire standardization plan, subject to a guarantee on the part of tire manufacturers that stocks of the new tires will be carried and available in all countries.

The Export Committee will obtain from the principal automobile manufacturers an estimate of the number of machines likely to be sold in foreign countries during the year beginning July 1, and the tire manufacturers will prepare a statement of foreign branches and dealers where the new standards will be carried. The tire manufacturers agreed that they will increase their foreign stocks as may be necessary to insure a supply to car users, and also endeavor to keep up renewals of old sizes for cars now in use abroad.

Motor Club's New Officers.

William C. Poertner was elected President of the Motor Club last week, succeeding Charles H. Larson, who has held the office two years. William Allen was elected Vice President; James C. Nichols, Treasurer, and Otto Braunworth, Secretary. The clubhouse is at 222 West Fifty-ninth Street.

SHIP MOTOR CARS BY BARGE CANAL

New York Dealers Plan to Buy Boat for Fifty Cars—Great Future for Motor Truck Use

Laurence H. Hart, a Buffalo engineer who had charge of several sections of the Barge Canal construction, told the members of the Motor Truck Club of America last week at their monthly meeting that the opening of the canal a little over a week ago could not have been better timed for transportation relief.

"The completion of this great canal," said Mr. Hart, "provides the greatest opportunity ever offered in this country to the development of motor truck transportation. By the Great Lakes the canal is closely connected with the big motor industry manufacturing centres and the shipment of finished material to the New York terminal should be accomplished in the near future more economically and with greater speed than is possible in the present condition of railroad congestion. Motor trucks will be used in large numbers in the territory between Buffalo and Albany to carry goods to and from the terminals which will soon be established. The average time by canal shipment from Buffalo to New York will be five days.

"Some idea of its future possibilities in motor truck use may be judged from the fact that 78 per cent. of the population of the State of New York lies within ten miles of the canal system. The canal is now under Government control, similar to the railroads, and the freight rates, for the time being, will be the same as railroad rates. During the war shipments by canal will be controlled by Government choice, and the freight embargoed from railroad shipment will be sent by way of the canal. The State stands ready to furnish terminal equipment as business demands and will provide the conveying and hoisting machinery neccessary to load trucks, as well as detachable bodies, trailers, &c., to eliminate delays.

"It is believed that at least 10,000,000 tons of freight will be carried by the canal during the first year, and it will not be long before 20,000,000 tons are carried. There are not enough barges at present to care for all the freight that might be sent by the canal, but that need will be filled as readily as possible. In the meantime it will be an act of patriotism to ship up to the available limit by the Barge Canal. We need every possible mode of transportation, and the canal must be used to relieve the railroad in every possible way."

That the automobile dealers in the city recognize the value of the canal in getting shipments of cars from the factory centres was revealed last week when it became known that half a dozen agencies are making arrangements to purchase a serviceable barge to carry cars from Buffalo to this city after shipment by the lakes from the factories at Detroit and other places. It is estimated that the cost would be $5,000, and the barge will be large enough for fifty passenger cars.

It will eliminate the costly driveaways which have been so necessary for months to get sufficient supplies, and when put in operation it will give an assurance of prompt and economical deliveries. The automobile trade, it is pointed out, can use the canal to advantage for eastbound freight from Buffalo to New York, and if passenger car production is not as radically curtailed as has been rumored, the canal will be available for larger motor car shipments than have been possible under existing handicaps this year.

The opening of the canal, said Mr. Hart, exemplifies the necessity for a broad-minded highway policy by the State to care for the rapidly increasing number of motor trucks which will be the carriers from the canal terminals to the industrial and agricultural localities. It will mean greater attention to bridge construction, one of the weak points in the highway system, as stronger bridges are urgently needed on many of the highways radiating from the canal to the interior.

Room for Motor Growth in India.

The number of motor cars registered in India at the end of March, 1917, was 16,261. These are distributed as follows: Calcutta, 4,286; Bombay, 3,068; Madras City, 1,937; Madras Presidency, 611; Burma, 1,669; Allahabad, (U. P.,) 1,402; Lahore, (Punjab,) 652; Bihar and Orissa, 803; Delhi 486; Nagpur, (C. P.,) 822; Karachi, (Sind,) 277; Peshawar, N. W. F., 269; Assam, 179.

ELECTRIC TRUCK FIELD.

Economical in City Work—Big Increase Abroad Due to War.

The electric trucks in New York City, according to an electrical engineer, are doing the work of 15,429 horses, which would require 2,775,800 bushels of oats and 84,810 tons of hay a year, the product of 77,000 acres, sufficient to supply food for more than 500,000 persons. An electric truck, by reason of its greater speed and efficiency, frequently does the work of three two-horse teams, thus releasing two drivers and not infrequently two helpers per truck. Thousands of electric trucks are successfully being used. Many of the largest transportation fleets are chiefly composed of electric vehicles.

In England, after several years of war, the rate of electric vehicle increase is in excess of 600 per cent., with prospects of greater gains. An extensive electric vehicle development is planned in France, where electric current generated by water power is available, thus lessening demands for gasoline, the importation of which imposes demands on ship tonnage.

From what can be learned of conditions in Germany, the electric vehicle has assumed a very commanding position in transportation. This is true in other foreign countries where demands for electric vehicles far outdistance the supply, and where local manufacturing is being planned to help out in the emergency.

Electric trucks are unsuited for service on the battlefield. They are not recommended for long-distance hauling, where the gasoline truck is rendering invaluable service. But in urban work, especially that involving more or less frequent stops, and where speed is not essential, the electric truck has proved its efficiency.

American Cars in Indo-China.

The American automobile has forced itself into the Saigon market since the advent of the European war, and people often refer to its increased sale as the "American invasion," says United States Consul Horace Remillard. At the beginning of 1915, he reports, there were but two American automobiles in Saigon out of a total of 647 machines, the remainder being nearly all French cars. Of the 708 automobiles toward the close of 1917, seventy-eight were American. Many French automobiles have deteriorated and have been replaced by American.

How to Stop a Skid.

Every automobile owner should learn how to stop a skid.

"When he feels the back of his car skidding," says a careful driving motorist, "if he will turn the steering wheel immediately in the direction of the skid he will find that it will cause the car to rotate in the opposite direction. With a little practice this swing of the steering wheel will become almost automatic when the car begins to skid."

SEVEN YEARS IN ACTIVE SERVICE.

The Pierce-Arrow truck No. 1 has just arrived in New York from Buffalo to celebrate its seventh birthday by repeating its run of May 28, 1911, from this city to Boston, when the 240 miles were made in twenty hours of actual running, averaging 4.7 miles to a gasoline gallon, carrying twenty barrels of oil. The mechanical upkeep for the seven years has cost the owners $1,053.08.

$10,000,000 FOR ROADS.

Congress Asked to Appropriate That Sum for Necessary Maintenance.

Congressman Cooper of Ohio has introduced a bill in the House of Representatives which provides for a Federal appropriation of $10,000,000 to be used in repairing roads over which there has been heavy travel and which have become impaired by extraordinary use by the Government. State Highway Commissions may apply for relief, under the bill, to the Secretary of Agriculture, and if approved by him provision will be made for the necessary repairs. The bill was referred to the House Committee on Roads.

How Soon Will Premiums Be Paid For Super-Sixes?

Soon, it Seems, People Will Pay Extra Prices to get the Car of Their Choice

It is not a new condition for people to pay premiums for prompt deliveries of Hudsons.

There have been many times when that situation has obtained.

It bids fair to be repeated again—soon.

This time the reason lies in the growing demand for cars of proved quality.

That demand grows.

More and more people can buy cars than ever before could afford them. But the supply grows less. Realizing the situation, still other thousands desire to get rid of the cars they now own that they may get new proved reliable cars that may be relied upon to serve them through the uncertain times ahead.

They know the growing difficulty of getting efficient automobile repair service. Consequently, they will not hazard their motor car needs by retaining a car that is dependent upon constant mechanical supervision.

So they, too, turn to the Super-Six.

They, having owned and used motor cars for several years, know what the Super-Six may be relied upon to do.

They watched the way it made its reputation on the speedway, in road races, in a double transcontinental race against time and in the most famous hill climb to the highest altitude to which a motor car was ever driven against time. They know the Super-Six defeated all contenders. And they further know how it has served others who have put it to the most severe tests.

That is why they have chosen the Super-Six.

It is the reason, also, why you too can rely upon it.

Strange and wonderful as is the performance record of the Super-Six, still all that has been said for it never seems able to match the final performance of the car. Ask anyone of 50,000 owners.

Does not this indicate the early date when premiums will be freely paid to obtain Super-Sixes?

We can see the inevitable situation. This is to warn you.

We are not getting, and will not get, all the cars for which we see a normal demand. Our allotments have been reduced twice since January.

Production cannot be increased, but demand shows how much motorists desire the Super-Six.

It is a case of the early bird if you will want a Super-Six this year.

BRAZILIAN TROOPS TO HELP IN EUROPE

Fully Trained Soldiers May Soon Be at the Front—Brazil in the War Heart and Soul

YES, Brazil will send troops to Europe." It was a Brazilian Army officer in New York City on official business for his country who spoke. "That is inevitable," he added. "Brazil has declared herself and Brazil will see the war to a finish. Not only will she fight the Hun with food and supplies, but early this Summer her soldiers will be fighting shoulder to shoulder with the Allies in Europe, even as her picked aviators are now fighting with the British Royal Flying Corps in France, and even as her navy is now serving with the British fleet on the other side, and with an American fleet in the South Atlantic."

This Brazilian officer, who had recently arrived from Brazil, could not grant an interview officially, but what he said was verified by a member of the Brazilian Military Commission in New York City, and Americans returning from Brazil tell of the tension of the Brazilian people and of the eagerness for service shown by the new troops mobilized since the declaration of a state of war with Germany on Oct. 26.

So quickly and quietly did Brazil enter the war that many Americans are skeptical about the part she may play. So general is the lack of information about Brazil's plans and movements that in most of the groups of allied flags displayed here that of Brazil is wanting.

The Brazilian people had been restive even in their commercial relations with Germany ever since accounts of the invasion of Belgium and other German atrocities created anti-Prussian sentiment in Brazil, which resulted in protests and finally in the severing of diplomatic relations last year. So far the war has had a salutary effect on Brazil. Industrially, it has done for her what times of peace would not have accomplished, and it has fired the people to a splendid pitch of patriotism. The war has put the finishing touches on Brazil's progress from a small nation to a great nation—from a self-centred land to a country united for the welfare of the world. Like the United States, Brazil is fighting for an ideal, for Brazil abolished autocracy within her own boundaries, even in its mildest form, and she will not be less zealous to help free the rest of the world. Young Brazilians are enlisting faster than the draft can get them.

Brazil is not depending on the volunteer system. Conscription was one of the first measures undertaken by the Brazilian Congress after the declaration of a state of war. Brazil was better prepared for conscription than the United States, since compulsory military service has always been in force there. Every civilian male there has been subject to two years of military or naval service on attaining his twenty-first year, and he has been eligible for such service until his forty-fourth year.

Brazil has thus built up a foundation for her new national army. According to members of the Brazilian Military Mission, Brazil had 56,000 trained men ready for her standing army when she entered the war. These men were mostly between the ages of 21 and 30.

Government officials and Brazilian papers have told of plans providing for three lines of defense. The first will be of boys between the ages of 17 and 20, to the number of 100,000. The second will consist of men between the ages of 20 and 37 to the number of 300,000. For the present men from the ages of 37 to 44 will form the national guard for home defense. It is understood that the men from the ages of 21 to 30 will form the standing army. These men, and all of the rest, excepting the youths between the ages of 17 and 20, have already been trained.

Colonel Alipio Gama, chief of the Brazilian Military Commission to New York City, and Captain Marcelino Fagundes, Secretary to the mission, told of Brazil's war plans.

"It would be difficult to keep our men at home even were that the plan," said Captain Fagundes. "It will be necessary for Brazil to shed blood with her sister nations. It cannot be a bloodless sacrifice! The sending of Brazilian troops to Europe is inevitable. The eight months needed to train troops have elapsed since the declaration of war. Only unusual political developments in South America can alter the determination to send troops.

"I think what our allies most expect of us is supplies," Colonel Gama said. "In these our country is inestimably rich. We are now shipping materials to Europe and the United States. We are developing our industries as never before. Be it food, supplies, or soldiers, Brazil is heart and soul in the war. She is preparing to give all of these in as great quantities as may be needed by her allies."

That there is no limit to the expense and trouble that Brazil is willing to shoulder to carry out her war program is shown by this commission and other envoys who have come in her interest to make purchases in the United States. She is today spending millions of dollars in the United States to speed up her war machine.

When her war mission came to the United States to buy guns and ammunition they could not do so. American munition manufacturers were working at top speed to supply their Government and to fill the orders from our allies. So the Brazilians immediately set about purchasing great quantities of factory equipment to enlarge their steel mills and munition factories. That turned the military commission into an industrial mission as well. In some cases they are buying entire factory equipments.

"Our vast country, territorially as large as the United States without Alaska, is one of unlimited resources," Colonel Gama said. "One of our best offerings to the world is manganese," he added. "Ours is the largest manganese production of the world. The United States and the Allies depend on this Brazilian manganese. Our production last year was 357,654 tons, most of which went to the United States, France, and England."

One of the most valuable things that Brazil has done so far is to patrol the South Atlantic. Even before her declaration of a state of war her destroyers had been acting as convoys for passenger and merchant ships from Brazilian harbors to New York and across the Atlantic.

Dr. Carlos Moreira, who was sent to the United States to buy whatever he thought necessary to build up Brazil economically, is an example of Brazil's determination to carry out her war program. Dr. Moreira sent back to Brazil from the United States 10,000 tons of grain and cereal seed, which is already being planted. He also purchased large quantities of implements. Brazil usually imports from the United States a large number of garden hoes suitable for use in cultivating mountain highlands. This year Dr. Moreira tried in vain to get them at the factories that had formerly made them for Brazil. He had but one more factory to try to obtain them from. "What will you do if you cannot get them there?" he was asked.

"I will buy machinery to equip a factory to make them at home," he said. "Brazil must have everything necessary for every phase of her war program.

"Agriculture in Brazil has quadrupled since 1914. There is as much agricultural land under cultivation now in the States of Espirito Santo, Bahia, and Sao Paulo as in all of Central Europe. In addition to coffee, Brazil is now raising wheat, cattle, cereals, and many sorts of vegetables. Formerly one of her big imports was rice. She now exports five times as much rice as she ever imported. American meat packers have established great packing plants in Brazil to conserve the meat supply, which was formerly wasted. Brazil has shipped to the Allies more than thirty million dollars' worth of meat, and this is nowhere near what she can supply."

Captain Alvaro Graca, head of the Lloyd Brazileiro, the Brazilian Government steamship line, who is an authority on the shipping situation of Brazil, said that she has enough ships to send all supplies that may be needed and transport all the men that she will have ready for service.

"Of the forty-three German steamers which were taken over by the Brazilian Government, thirty were chartered to France," said he. "Thirteen were taken over by Brazil to be used for shipping to New York and for transatlantic service. In addition, Brazil has twenty-two passenger and cargo ships of large tonnage suitable for overseas service, and there are other large ships owned by private Brazilian lines. The thirty-five Government steamers are capable of carrying an average of 2,000 men and 5,000 tons of cargo. That makes a combined tonnage and capacity of about 175,000 tons of supplies and 70,000 soldiers. In seven successful voyages this fleet could convey half a million men and 1,225,000 tons of supplies across to European ports."

Brazil's war mission is now in Europe visiting the allied battlefronts and capitals to ascertain what is most needed from Brazil. Public opinion is demanding the early sending of Brazilian troops. The number will be decided by Congress, which convened on May 3. Brazilian military experts in New York City declare that unless there is some unusual change in the South American political situation most of the Brazilian troops who have completed their training will be sent overseas.

American business has been motorized. For both short and long hauls the gasoline truck has proven itself a thoroughly efficient form of transportation. And no intelligent field Executive would dream of tackling his job without the proper equipment—a dependable touring car or roadster.

It would amaze you to know how many Lawyers, Doctors, Architects, Contractors and Specialty Salesmen have adopted the Paige. These men have bought their cars for active service, and they have been influenced in their selection by practical considerations only. They deliberately sought out the car that would offer the greatest dollar-for-dollar value—and they found it in the Paige.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Irregular After Weak Opening, but Rails Close Higher—Reserve Lower.

Opening with the question of action at this session on new revenue legislation still being debated at the Capitol, yesterday's market brought out further selling orders which caused an overnight loss of 1⅛ in Steel and smaller declines in other active issues. Almost immediately the movement was halted, however, and the opening prices proved the lowest of the session. The railroads came into better favor as offering an opportunity for investment where increases in excess profits taxes will not be effective.

The behavior of the list after the pronounced weakness which was sending prices down in the last few minutes of trading on Friday caused surprise, for the morning news seemed to indicate that Representative Kitchin would have his way in the matter of introducing new tax legislation at this session of Congress. There was a fair degree of activity, with recoveries making gradual headway.

Mr. Kitchin was quoted yesterday as promising that existing taxes must be more than doubled to provide perhaps $8,000,000,000 for war, but no estimates have yet been submitted showing the probable rate of increase in expenditures. He is acting on the theory that so long as all of the money that will be raised will be needed either by this country or its allies the simple way of getting it is through adding to the percentages fixed by the 1917 law, apparently without regard to the ability of the different kinds of business affected to stand a 100 per cent. increase. With the Government fixing prices for many articles, it becomes increasingly necessary that the probable influence of heavier burdens on production be examined carefully in advance. Certainly the country should not be asked to pass through another period of unsettling disturbances, such as attended the entire course of tax discussions last year.

For the first time in many weeks, the surplus reserve showed only a moderate change as reported in yesterday's bank statement. It stood on Friday night at $41,963,000, a decrease of but $4,235,000 for the week. There was a net increase of deposits of $51,000,000, calling for an increase of $7,630,000 in reserve, with an actual increase of credits at the Federal Reserve Bank of only $3,797,000. Loans decreased $30,000,000.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Depression Less Than Expected.

After initial declines of substantial amounts had occurred in yesterday's stock market the traders took either a philosophical attitude toward new taxation plans or decided that the news from Washington pointed toward an extreme view of Congressional leaders. When dispatches were received in mid-morning saying that definite action in respect to the revision of the war imposts upward had not been taken, the market steadied and gave a fairly good account of itself to the close. At first the rails were inclined to move with the industrials, but their later forward movement helped the whole market. The net declines, while betokening weakness in certain stocks, were smaller than many traders had expected when they arrived in the Street before the opening.

Tobacco Stock Again Scarce.

Bidders for American Sumatra Tobacco again found offerings rather light. The result was a 2-point advance. The sharp swings in this stock for several weeks have resembled the ragged movements in General Motors late last year.

Fixed Oil Prices.

The new fixed prices for gasoline and petroleum for export are reported to be little changed from what the companies have been receiving for some time on shipments to the allied countries of Europe. The industry has no reason to complain about them, according to information secured in export quarters.

Italian Exchange Lower.

The market for Italian exchange indicates that steps to improve the quotation have not yet become effective. Cable transfers established a new low record for many years yesterday at 9.09½, while the demand quotation stood at 9.11, compared with a normal figure of 5.1826. That is, a dollar would buy more than 9 lire, against less than 5¼ lire when no undue influences were working in the market.

Banks Change Their Names.

The New York State Banking Superintendent has granted permission to the German Savings Bank of Brooklyn to change its name to the Lincoln Savings Bank of Brooklyn. He has also approved of the Germania Savings Bank of Kings County changing its name to the Fulton Savings Bank of Kings County.

British Treasury Bills Sold.

J. P. Morgan & Co. have sold a substantial amount of British Treasury ninety-day bills at a discount of 6 per cent., the same to be delivered on Tuesday. For the last two weeks no bills were offered, but prior to a fortnight ago bills not in excess of $15,000,000 per week have been sold quite regularly.

State Bank Loan Subscriptions.

The State Bank announces that its total subscriptions to the Third Liberty Loan amounted to $4,275,900. This figure includes applications filed by its customers, as well as the bank's own subscription, and it also takes into account the "coupon books" sold by the bank. The figures given out by the Federal Reserve Bank credited the State Bank with a total of $2,340,900 for Manhattan, Brooklyn, and the Bronx, and were exclusive of coupon books sold. The State Bank reports 50,822 individual subscriptions.

Loan Payment on Tuesday.

On Tuesday there will be payable the 20 per cent. installment on the Third Liberty Loan. There will also mature on that date $500,000,000 of 4½ per cent. Treasury certificates of indebtedness sold on Feb. 27 last. Certificates due Tuesday and also those maturing on June 18, July 9, and July 18 are acceptable in payment of the Liberty Loan installment. The total loan subscriptions in the New York district amounted to $1,114,930,700, of which full payments have been made on $796,571,950 of bonds. On the remaining $318,358,750 of bonds only the initial payment of 5 per cent. has been made. Tuesday's payments of 20 per cent. on these bonds will amount to $63,671,750; but inasmuch as a great many subscribers will no doubt elect to complete their payments on the bonds, instead of merely paying the 20 per cent., the Government receipts will probably be considerably in excess of the $63,000,000. The balance now due on the bonds subscribed for in this district is $302,440,796.

The Bank Statement.

A decrease of $4,236,000 in excess reserves was reported yesterday by the Clearing House. This brought the surplus reserves down to about $42,000,000. Loans for the week decreased by $30,000,000, while demand and time deposits increased by $51,000,000. Government deposits were reduced by $150,000,000 to $364,000,000.

Reserve Bank's Report.

The weekly report of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York showed a gain of $5,000,000 in gold reserves. Discounts and advances made to member institutions expanded by $75,000,000, and purchases of acceptances increased by about $8,000,000. The bank's investments in Government bonds and certificates of indebtedness decreased by $40,000,000. Deposits of member and nonmember institutions increased by $2,000,000, while Government deposits increased by $10,000,000. There was practically no change in the volume of Federal Reserve notes outstanding.

Shipbuilding Profits.

The announcement by Director General Schwab of the apportionment of some big new orders for ships in the Great Lakes yards has caused some sharpening of lead pencils and pulling out of scratchpads in other shipbuilding offices. It is generally assumed that these contracts, when finally signed, will be on the basis of a fixed price for each ship, since Mr. Schwab has indicated his preference for that type, and the stabilization of steel prices has made it possible. And while there is no competition, and apparently will not be until the war is over, every shipbuilding company is still very eager to know what every other company is doing, if it can. Just now the figuring is headed toward a good guess at what the fixed fee for these ships will be; after the fee is announced it will endeavor to reduce this to profits behind the stock.

Upsetting the Estimates.

The enthusiastic statisticians in one big banking office had just finished an elaborate and beautiful analysis of the probable return under the Government rental for each railroad in which this particular house is interested, and were resting proudly on their oars, when Mr. McAdoo, by simply "firing" the Presidents of all the roads, and by the implied threat of further shifting of salary burdens from operating expenses to deductions from corporate income, sent them back into their tables to chase down some tens of thousands a year and observe their effect on the totals. The totals, particularly on the big roads, were not greatly affected by the change, but it is a point of honor with the true statistician to round just such items as this up and subdue them.

THE ART OF CAMOUFLAGE.

JAPAN'S COMMERCE GROWS.

Foreign Trade for Quarter Shows Increase of $122,000,000.

The report of Japan's foreign trade for the first three months of the current year shows a total of 787,832,216 yen, or about $394,000,000 for exports and imports, according to figures prepared by the Department of Finance in Tokio. This compares with 544,121,680 yen, or $272,000,000 for the same period last year.

Total exports for the three months amounted to 397,316,203 yen, or about $199,000,000, which compares with 317,724,192 yen, or $159,000,000, for the first quarter of the year 1917. The merchandise imports totaled 390,516,013 yen, or $195,000,000 for the three months, as against 226,397,488 yen, or $113,000,000 for a similar period a year ago.

The exports of gold and silver during the first three months of the current year amounted to only 4,000 yen, or $2,000, which compares with 18,227,032 yen, or $9,000,000 for the corresponding period in 1917. The imports of gold and silver totaled 790,668 yen, or $395,000, as against 17,898,204 yen, or about $9,000,000 during the first quarter of 1917. The decrease in the movement of the precious metals has been due to the general embargoes placed upon exports by practically all of the Governments.

OUTPUT OF COPPER SHOWS A DECLINE

Production Decreased in April in Face of the Steadily Expanding Demand for Metal.

LABOR SHORTAGE IS FELT

War Calls Engineers and Mechanics As Well as the Men from the Mines.

In view of the steadily expanding demand for copper to be used in war work, the reports of production from the various mining companies are worthy of considerable study. In April, when weather and transportation conditions were better than in March, there was a decline instead of an advance in the output. Compared with February, April brought a substantial increase, but the extent of the increase, about 15,000,000 pounds, was not great enough to be distinctly encouraging for the reason that operating conditions in February were unfavorable because of deep snows and retarded railroad activities.

The country's output of copper in April amounted approximately to 175,000,000 pounds, basing the broad estimate on the reports of production issued by seventeen companies. In the preceding month about 183,000,000 pounds were produced, and in February the estimated total was 160,000,000 pounds. In April of last year the complete outturn was in the neighborhood of 188,000,000 pounds. Last Autumn the supplies coming into sight were depressed to a lower level than in any of the months of the current year, due in large part to strikes, which caused practical shutdowns by several of the important concerns. The recovery began in October, with a gain of 25,000,000 pounds over the preceding month, but the November total again suffered a setback of some 4,000,000 pounds. December and January brought some improvement, followed by a check again in February.

Irregularity of Production.

This brief sketch of monthly fluctuations, derived from the records of Dow, Jones & Co., indicates that at a time when the munition plants, shipyards and engine works are calling for more and more copper, the production has been highly irregular and a steady forward progress is still something which has to be looked for. It is estimated that in the first four months of the year the output by American companies was 513,500,000 pounds, compared with 587,779,704 pounds in the same period last year.

In the following table the production of some of the more prominent concerns in April and March is set forth, with a comparison with April of last year:

*Estimated.

Before the conference was held in Washington last week between copper producers and representatives of the war industries, copper men expressed the hope that the fixed price would be advanced as an incentive to increased production. Presumably the Government officials were persuaded that 23½ cents a pound was high enough to bring the mining companies, as a whole, an adequate profit, and they decided not to allow a general increase. The producers, naturally, were disappointed, but they left Washington with the impression that the retention of the old fixed price for a period of seventy-five days might not be made absolute. They felt that some adjustments would be made in the near future which would enable the producers whose costs are high to make an adequate profit, and at the same time pay an increased charge to refiners which handle their smelter output.

It is difficult to ascertain the full relation which exists at the present time between the price of 23½ cents a pound and the state of production. The big companies made large profits last year, but the major portion of their return was obtained when the market was open and copper went to the highest bidder. It was not until near the end of the third quarter that the fixed price went into effect, and the output of the Anaconda, Inspiration, Miami, and other concerns at that time, and until near the end of the year, was greatly reduced because of labor troubles.

Mining Forces Depleted.

As far as the largest units in the industry are concerned, it may be said that they can derive a good profit from 23½-cent copper. While their costs have advanced sharply in the last six months, the margin continues large enough to stimulate output to the highest notch possible under current conditions of labor. The depletion of mining forces by military necessities is becoming one of the serious factors in the situation, and promises to have a more drastic effect on output as extensions of the draft law are made, unless measures are taken to conserve employes of the industry in several departments. The decline of production in April is attributed by mine operators largely to the labor item, the scarcity applying not only to the men in the mines but to engineers, mechanics, and workers at the smelters.

The labor drainage applies to the smaller concerns equally. The other elements which tend to increase costs are also as prevalent with them as with their larger contemporaries, and it is because of these conditions, which would tend to check production more quickly with the lesser units of the industry than with the greater, as the result of the inroad on profits, that an adjustment of the price is looked for in their behalf.

The country and the Allies need the copper and are absorbing most of the available supplies. There has not been any talk of a shortage for war purposes, but the fact stands forth that the tremendous demand of the last three years has cut stocks down to a low figure.

"In connection with the extraordinary movement of copper lately," says Copper Gossip, "the immensity of demand is revealed by the fact that during the last three years the estimated domestic consumption of new copper amounted to 3,878,872,303 pounds. This vast quantity is considerably more than the aggregate production by the United States in the years 1913, 1914, and 1915, and 771,876,643 pounds larger than the total world's production in the year 1916.

"These record-breaking figures may well serve as an object lesson of what may be expected in the future. It is becoming more and more of a problem of speeding up production so that it may keep pace with the rapid development of a world-wide gigantic consumption. If output is to be ample for all essential and emergency needs it is absolutely imperative that American mines be kept working at top speed. The importance of securing the largest possible output from all copper producing properties is seen to be vital to supplying the Government and our allies with the necessary material for winning the war. The world is eagerly clamorous for large supplies of the metal, and yet in the face of these conditions some of our leading copper mines are outputting on a smaller scale than a year ago."

ROSENWALD ADVISES COMMON-SENSE SAVING

Member of War Advisory Commission Says Public Must Stop Buying Things It Does Not Want.

Julius Rosenwald, President of Sears, Roebuck & Co., and a member of the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, has issued this statement as to the real object of the war savings campaign:

"Saving by every one is as imperative for the winning of this war as is the mobilizing of armies, more than that, the mobilizing of armies is entirely futile if this military step is not accompanied by the rigorous, common-sense saving of the nation, for without the saving the marshaled hosts cannot be equipped, cannot be fed, cannot be carried overseas and cannot be put into the fight.

"We can finance the enormous cost of this war by spending only for the things we need, not by spending for the things we desire. Just so long as we continue to spend for things we do not need, just that long do we prolong the war and add to the tremendous sacrifice of life and property. Not until all of us realize the stern fact that all spending, no matter for what, consumes labor and material, and that labor and material are the essentials of victory, will we be awake to the fundamentals of this grave situation.

"Luxuries must be put aside, actual necessities must be continued. It would be a grave disaster if the home-staying population by foolish sacrifice were not kept fit for its all-important task of supporting our armies in the field. The nation is now mobilizing its industrial resources in order to put behind our army a great productive machine. The output of this machine must be increased as the army is increased, and we are beginning to realize how great an army we must raise before there can be an end to this struggle.

"Some men in manufacturing and trade have been fearful the vitally necessary reduction in the home consumption of goods is going to hurt their business. They have an idea that the Government can be financed only by the profits of their business, but they overlook the fundamental fact that the need of the Government is not mere money. The vital victory-winning thing is the product of human labor.

"This means, in the last analysis, a radical change in business in this country, but it does not mean less business. It means not only a greatly increased volume of business, but business of the kind that is essential to the ending of the war—to the ending of it in such a way that we may resume business as usual at an earlier date than would be possible if we attempted now to conduct business as usual."

CUMBERLAND VALLEY'S YEAR

Both Operating and Net Corporate Incomes Show Increases.

The report of the Cumberland Valley Railroad Company for the calendar year 1917, published yesterday, shows an increase in both operating and net corporate income, as compared with 1916, something which upward of 90 per cent. of the railroads of the United States failed to do. The Cumberland Valley's increase amounted to $180,962 on net income to a total of $1,603,903, which is equivalent to 32.28 per cent. on the $4,848,550 of common stock outstanding, after paying the regular 8 per cent. dividends on both classes of preferred stock.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company owns all except $20,000 of the common and an equal proportion of the preferred stock of the Cumberland Valley. Last year the gross operating revenues of the road were $4,838,904, net revenues $2,297,061 and operating income $1,836,294. The sum of $1,052,720 over and above all dividends, and income appropriations was transferred to the surplus account for the year.

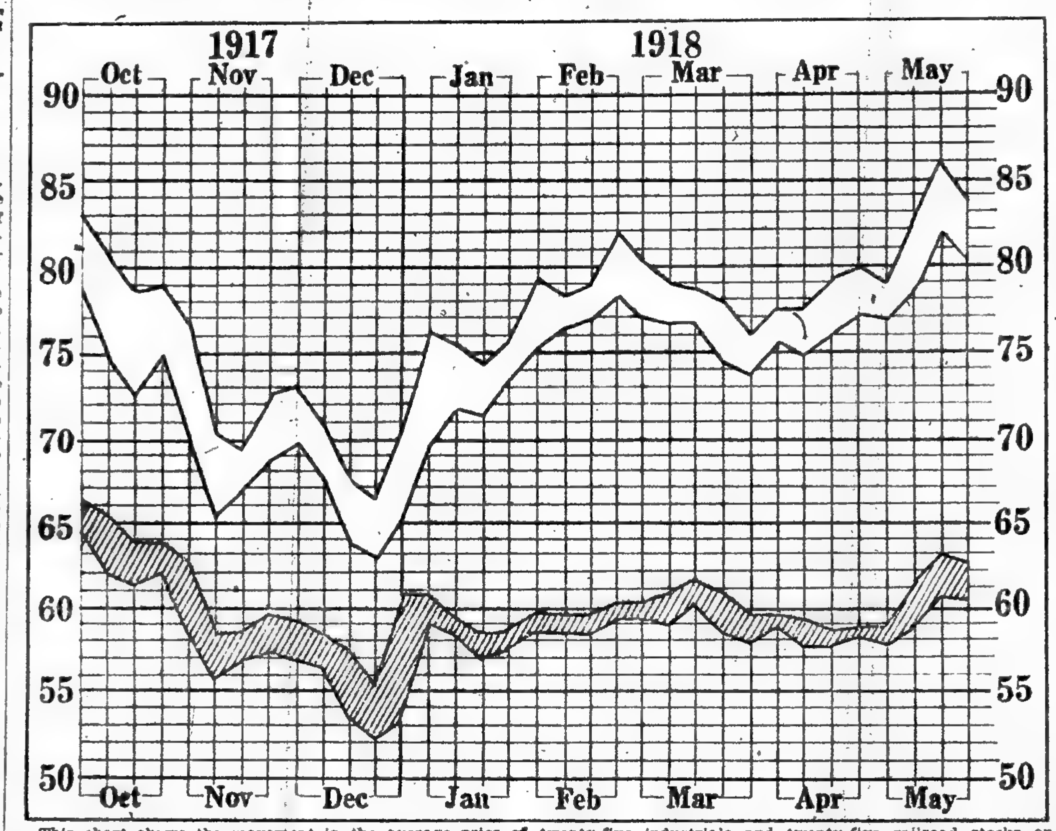
How Railroad Stocks Have Responded to Government Control



This chart shows the movement in the average price of twenty-five industrials and twenty-five railroad stocks on the New York Stock Exchange. The upper line shows the movement of the industrials and the lower shaded line the movement of the railroad issues. The chart brings out clearly the fact that there was a sharp upward movement in railroad shares in the last week of the year, when the announcement was made that the Government was taking over the railroads of the country, and that a further advance occurred a week ago upon the announcement that the Government had allowed the expenditure of nearly one billion dollars for the improvement of the roads and for the purchase of additional equipment. During the same period the industrials rose at an even more rapid rate. Last week, as the lines show, reaction occurred in both the railroads and the industrials.

COTTON MARKET MOVES UP SHARPLY

Prices Improve on Covering of Shorts and on Enlarged Trade Buying.

In an interesting short session yesterday morning the local cotton market reacted strongly against the recent downward tendency, carrying prices back up the line for a net advance of 42 to 66 points. July contracts once more led the advance, selling at one time 71 points above Friday's closing figures.

What little news there was continued bearish, at least in its superficial aspects, but it became plain early in the day that not only was the technical position considerably strengthened by the heavy long liquidation of the last few days, but that there was in progress a gradual veering of sentiment in interpreting the news which had looked so bearish on first inspection, particularly the statistical position of the trade.

The market opened very much as it had closed, with July and August in demand at a smart advance, and the new crop months almost stationary. The buying worked down the list, however, with increasing apprehensiveness being manifested by the short interest, and the advance, once initiated, remained steady until the close, when enough week-end realizing developed to bring prices down a trifle from the best of the day. October continued to be the object of a fair amount of rather cautious buying by spot houses, and this continued during the advance to some extent, instead of picking soft spots, as had recently been the case.

There may have been some buying on the optimistic official tone on the submarine and tonnage situation, but it was largely indirect and speculative. Yesterday's quotations follow:

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

The small movement of wheat at Western points shows that stocks are getting down very close to the point of exhaustion, but it is evident that there is more wheat in the country than shows on the official visible supply statement. The crop outlook continues very favorable and harvest is rapidly approaching in the Southwest.

RYE.

Market weak; No. 2 Western, $2.07½, cost and freight, New York.

CORN.

The corn market was very feverish, and, after showing early strength, with gains of about 1½c, prices experienced a sharp break, closing at the lowest, with net losses of 1c to 1½c. There was good buying at the start on rumors that the Government was placing big orders for alcohol, which would necessitate distillers making heavy purchases of cash grain. In the local cash market kiln dried No. 3 yellow corn was quoted at $1.80½; No. 4 yellow, $1.70½, cost and freight, New York.

OATS.

The oats market was steady early, with moderate gains, in sympathy with corn. The undertone was easy, however, and when corn broke prices eased off and closed net unchanged to ⅛c decline. The local cash market was steady and about unchanged, standard quoted at 81½@82c, No. 2 white, 82½c, No. 3 white, 81@81½c; No. 4 white, 80@81c, fancy clipped white, 83@86c; ordinary clipped white, 82@83c; all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market experienced a steady opening, owing to small receipts of hogs at Western points, but subsequently became weak under heavy selling, prompted largely by the sharp decline in the grain markets. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 12,000, estimated for Monday, 44,000, and for this week, 150,000; Kansas City received 1,000 and Omaha 5,300 hogs.

COFFEE.

The attention of the coffee trade was almost completely monopolized by the latest Government regulations which were received before the opening yesterday morning. At first the new ruling, to the effect that no importers of coffee will be permitted paying freight rates in excess of those fixed by the United States Shipping Board, was taken as a bullish feature on the ground that it would curtail importations. The Brazil cable to the Exchange showed firmer markets there, Rio spots advancing 75 reis and Santos being 50 reis higher. Santos futures showed a decline of 25 reis to an advance of 75 reis. SUGAR.

There were no fresh developments in refined sugar, local refiners working on Government orders and also catching up on oversales, making local distribution to brokers light. The demand, however, continues moderate and most sections of the country have ample supplies of sugar. The International Sugar Committee failed to report any purchases of raws, but sales so far for June shipment have a good start toward the mark set, being over 100,000 tons and it is believed that total June business will exceed 300,000 tons.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 12,871 packages. Larger offerings, more reserved buying, and stronger pressure to sell combined to weaken values for all grades, and the market is unsettled at the decline. Creamery, higher than extras, a pound, 43¾@44½c; extras, (92 score,) 42@43¼c; firsts, (88 to 91 score,) 41@42½c; seconds, (83 to 87 score,) 37@40½c; thirds, 35@36c; creamery, unsalted, higher than extras, 45@45½c; extras, 44@44½c; firsts, 42@43½c; seconds, [illegible]; State dairy, tubs, finest, 41c; good to prime, 39@42½c; common to fair, 35@38c; renovated, extras, 37½@38c; firsts, 36@37c; lower grades, 32@35c; imitation creamery, firsts, 33½@34c; ladles, current make, firsts, 31@32c; seconds, 29½@30c; lower grades, 28@29c; packing stock, current make, No. 1, 29½@30c; No. 2, 28½@29c; lower grades, 26@28c.

EGGS.—20,891 cases. The week is closing without further material change. There is a continued good demand for strictly high quality Northern, fresh gathered eggs, suitable for the best class of trade, and the market for such maintains a fairly firm tone. There has been a fair movement in the medium and lower qualities under the recent pressure to sell at easy prices, but there is a good deal of this class of stock left unsold which holders are anxious to dispose of, and for which the market is unimproved. Nearby white eggs are cleaning up rather better under somewhat lighter receipts, and with a fair demand prices are steady. Fresh gathered extras, a dozen, 36½@37c; storage packed firsts, 34½@36c; regular packed extra firsts, 34½@35½c; regular packed firsts, 33@34½c; seconds and poorer, 29@32c; fresh gathered dirties, No. 1, storage packed, 29@29½c; No. 1, regular packed, 28½@29c; No. 2 and poorer, 25@28c; fresh gathered checks, good to choice, dry, 26@28c; under grades, 18@25c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby Western hennery whites, fine to fancy, 40@41c; ordinary to prime, 36@40c; gathered whites, ordinary to fine, 36@39c; Western and Southern, gathered whites, 35@37c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery browns, 38@40c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 33@35½c; duck eggs, 29@42c.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

The Merchant's Point of View

Before the numerous agencies engaged in making a success of the drive for the Third Liberty Loan had had the chance to recover from their exertions, the intensive campaign for raising the Red Cross Fund was under way, and so, last week, the energies of many industrial leaders were given over to other matters than those of trade. The time, however, was opportune because so many business matters are now in abeyance, either waiting for their decision on official action or being readjusted to the new conditions which such action already taken has brought about. The curtailment of production, or an allotment of it for civilian purposes, so that war needs may be fully met, is one of the ends in view. Another is the troublesome one of further price fixing. Neither seems likely to be dealt with in any general manner, or according to an arbitrary ratio, the disposition being to handle one thing at a time and with special reference to the needs of the moment. But the general situation appears to be improving very much, especially because of the extremely favorable crop reports which the Government has been issuing. The outlook for the yields of the grains and cotton seems to be getting better each week, and this has produced a feeling of confidence in all circles of business, which is strengthened by the hopeful reports from the European battlefront.

German "Peaceful Penetration."

Incidents like the seizure of cotton stored in this country for the benefit of Germany only serve to emphasize the grip which German interests had obtained here. It had long been suspected that the big manufacturers in Germany were preparing for the resumption of work after the war by acquiring raw materials surreptitiously in this and other countries at comparatively low prices. This was in order to avoid the higher ones which a scramble would cause when peace was declared, and many long-delayed demands for the materials would be put in. It would not be at all surprising if it were discovered that similar purchases had been made of copper and other metals, rubber, and wool. Wherever stores can be reached which are really owned by German interests, dealing with them will be easy. They will simply be sold to Americans, and in such a way that they cannot be turned over to the Germans. Other interests in which subjects of the Kaiser are concerned are not so easily dealt with. Take, for example, the cases of going industries in this country which are virtually owned by various of the large manufacturers' trusts in Germany, and in some of which the Kaiser himself and his entourage are financially concerned. The Alien Property Custodian has taken them under his charge, and they are in many instances making large war profits. It would be a manifest injustice to let these profits inure to the benefit of those who set the war going, yet it would be an injury to this country to stop the industries themselves. Mr. Mitchell, the Custodian, believes the time has come to stop piling up profits for the Germans and that their interests should be sold out to Americans so as to put an end to German "peaceful penetration" of industries in this country. German industrial enterprises always remain German. They never become American, and must, therefore, be prevented from gaining a foothold here.

Waiving a Share of Profits.

Food for thought, if nothing else, is contained in an incident which was among the past week's happenings. It seems that, some months ago, a number of reputable silk houses formed a corporation for the purpose of assisting the Ordnance Department in the manufacture of 7,000,000 yards of cartridge cloth. A half a million dollars in cash was paid in by the incorporators to put the business on a proper basis. The contract entered into with the company provided that the work should be done on the basis of 7½ per cent. commission. Now, when considerable of the work has been done, the company has formally offered to cut down its commission from 7½ per cent. to 3 per cent., "or less at their discretion." This means a saving to the Government of between $200,000 and $300,000. It was the Allied Silk Trading Corporation which did this, and the reasons for its course are worth stating. The commission originally agreed upon, it says, was "with the idea of safeguarding the company from any possible loss that might occur in the execution of the contract, the company being uncertain at the time as to prompt payments by the Government, requirements, and possible contingencies." Having discovered, however, that payments have been prompt and requirements reasonable and that ready assistance has been rendered by the Ordnance Department, the company shows its appreciation by reducing its commission. To this is added: "The spirit we are endeavoring to display we hope will be emulated by others." There will be many a fervent "Amen!" to this. Don't push, crowd, or shove, brother contractors, in getting into line! There will be plenty of room for all.

Want the Needles Badly.

Before the War Service Committee of the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers, which met in Philadelphia the other day, were presented the details of a project for obtaining 10,000,000 German-made knitting needles. These are said to be owned by jobbers in Christiania, Norway. The approval of the Government is needed and also the permission of the British Government before the needles can be shipped. In support of the movement it is urged that the implements are absolutely necessary if the knitting mills of the country are to be operated at anything like capacity, and that the needles made in this country are poor in quality and too small in quantity to supply the demand. The latest received in this country came from Rotterdam before war was declared between the United States and Germany. The making of these machine needles was one of the many small industries which the Germans made peculiarly their own, and many of which are the so-called "key" industries on which others are dependent. In spite of high protective tariffs, manufacturers in this country would not undertake the making of high-grade needles of the kind, finding it more profitable to make other things. But, after the imports of the German needles were stopped, it was understood that American manufacturers had gone into the field and were succeeding in producing articles as good as those which used to come from Germany. If they have not done so, what is the reason? It seems hardly possible that the skill required should be lacking. Nor could it be a fear that the enterprise would not pay. Without competition from the outside they could charge anything within reason for their output.

To Show Country of Origin.

There is awaiting action before Congress a measure to enforce the labeling of articles made in this country with a distinctive mark to show their place of origin. The proposition is not a novel one, having been broached from time to time for several years. There is much to be said in its favor, and from more than one standpoint. The first impression of the merits of the proposal would be that its enactment would prevent the use of the sign "imported" on many things which are really made here, but which is employed as a pretext to get higher prices for them. This has resulted in a belittling or undervaluing of many meritorious goods of domestic make. But this is only one aspect of the matter. There is no questioning the advertising value in export trade of a distinctive American stamp on articles produced here. This implies, of course, that the articles themselves have merit, and it is part of the plan to see to it that they are kept up to standard. Such a control would also be of much value to domestic purchasers, assuring them of quality. The Germans, in their foreign trade, set great store on the value of the "Made in Germany" label. So much so was this the case that they did not hesitate to apply it to articles made elsewhere but which their exporters handled. In this way they managed to get a lot of business which, other countries, the United States included, might have obtained direct. The Germans were mere intermediaries, but they managed to take their toll on foreign-made goods and were advertised at the same time.

Cotton's Statistical Position.

A study of the quotations of cotton during the past month or two would seem to show the hopelessness of trying to keep up wholly inflated and artificial prices for such a commodity. Yet, at the outset, it seemed as though the circumstances could not be more propitious for success. The holders were free of debt and were strongly aided by the banks in the growing districts in protecting their holdings, as well as by the general sentiment of the localities. The inordinate profits made by the mills were a further incentive to the growers in the effort to secure what they deemed their proportionate share of such profits. Then, too, there were lugubrious prophecies concerning the new crop and hopes for a speedy termination of the war, with its concomitant of a sudden foreign demand for more cotton. Meanwhile, however, the exports dwindled and the takings by domestic spinners failed to come up to expectations. As a result, the consumption figures are about 2,000,000 bales less than they were last year, and the amount of cotton in storage keeps piling up. When the new cotton year opens, it appears there will be 3,000,000 bales or more of a carryover to contend with, and the indications just now look to a larger crop than usual this year. The quotations on the Exchanges are merely registering these conditions. Of the goods market there is little new to be said. Prices do not reflect the change in the cost of raw materials, but they are also on an artificial basis. Few believe they can be maintained for any length of time.

Wool Supply and Woolens.

Now that the wool in the country and to arrive is under the control of the Government, more interest is shown in the quantity available for both military and civilian uses. In connection with this, there are again put forward all sorts of absurd statements. One of these, issued by several of the trade papers and apparently gotten up with a purpose, has a calculation as to the wool needed by an army of 5,000,000 using 190 pounds per man each year. This would call for a total of 950,000,000 pounds. It is sought to create the impression that so much wool will be needed at once in addition to that already provided for about 2,000,000 men under arms. Altogether aside from the time it would take to put an extra 5,000,000 men in the field and the amount of wool which sheep would grow in the meantime, no account is taken of the additional facilities which will be provided for bringing wool to this country. Nor is account taken of the large amount of shoddy which is used in eking out the supply of virgin wool. A better idea of wool used is shown in the reports of the woolen mills, which have used in the first four months of this year 271,400,000 pounds for all purposes, or at the rate of 884,200,000 pounds per year. If this ratio were kept up there would be several hundred million pounds left at the end of the year. As things appear now, no one need worry about a scarcity of wool in 1918. Meanwhile the prices of fabrics for civilian use are on a speculative basis, middlemen using the various scare stories as a basis for exactions.

SHOULD DELIVERY BE CHARGED FOR?

A Question That Arises in Connection with the Ruling for Drafting Men.

While there is apparently no real authority at the moment for saying that the War Department's ruling, requiring men of the draft ages to engage in some useful work by July 1 or fight, will extend to the delivery departments of the retail dry goods stores of the country, it is being interpreted that way here, in view of the Provost Marshal General's classing of store clerks among the men now employed in unessential occupations. With the present scarcity of store labor, a ruling of this kind, it is asserted, would have a serious effect on retail establishments generally, and especially the larger ones.

It will mean, according to men who know, either a sharp curtailment in the service now rendered by stores all over the country, or a continuation of this service at a much higher cost. This higher cost will come about in one of two ways, or both. It is a store axiom that if the number of delivered articles is reduced, without a proportionate reduction in delivery equipment, the cost of delivering each article is increased. Again, with the store male labor market depleted and the demand constant, it is asserted that the cost of these workers will advance even more than it has, producing an additional expense in operating a delivery department.

In these days of high merchandise and operating costs and small net profits, it is asserted that anything which tends to increase the overhead of a store looms up as a serious matter. The probable added expense of maintaining a delivery department on anything like a normal scale, as an outgrowth of the War Department's ruling, is just such a matter. If the stores of the country want to continue their present service it appears that they either will have to bear the burden added in this way, or they will have to offset it by passing the increased cost of delivery to the general public in the form of higher prices for the merchandise it buys or in the shape of a charge for delivery.

With the Commercial Economy Board and Government officials generally anxious to further the "Carry Your Purchases" movement, thereby releasing man power for the army without placing an added burden on the stores, the suggestion is made that the best way out of the difficulty is for them to sell their merchandise over the counters on a non-delivery basis, adding a charge for delivery. This, it is asserted, will not only be fair to the stores, but will be fair to the customer who takes with her the merchandise she buys.

It seems, however, that placing such a plan in operation is by no means any easy thing to do. First of all, there are certain kinds of merchandise that no person could reasonably be expected to carry home after purchasing. Then there is the problem of fixing an equitable charge for delivery. With the delivery cost of the average store ranging from 1½ to 3 per cent. of the gross business done, it is said to be apparent that this charge could not be fixed on a percentage basis. If this were done in the case of a store having a delivery cost of 2 per cent. it would mean that a blouse valued at $3 would cost the customer only 6 cents for delivery, whereas the actual cost of delivery would be at least twice that amount in a city of any size, and possibly three or four times as great.

To meet this objection, as well as several others that arise, the suggestion has been made that deliveries, if charged for at all, should be charged for the same as freight is—on the basis of weight. More specifically, it is suggested that a fixed charge me made on all packages or bundles weighing ten pounds or under, and a graduated charge be made in addition for each extra pound. For purposes of illustration, this charge might be 10 cents for articles weighing ten pounds or less, with an added charge of 1½ cents for each extra pound. In the case of a twenty-pound package the charge for delivery on this basis would be 25 cents, for a 100-pound package it would be $1.45, and so on.

If this charge were found to be higher than necessary, as it is said it probably would in many communities, the delivery fee could be based on a flat rate of a cent a pound, with a minimum charge of 10 cents, or it could be based on a rate of a cent a pound for the first ten pounds, with the same minimum, and a half-cent for each extra pound. The first of the last two plans would make the delivery charge on a twenty-pond package 20 cents, while the second would make that charge 15 cents.

Not only would a system of this kind tend to lessen the overhead of a store through increasing the number of carried purchases and offsetting the added cost of deliveries where they are desired by the customer, but it would tend to check many of the evils that have for years been the bane of the retail trade and which, it is contended, should be checked now—in order to conserve the nation's resources to the fullest possible extent—if they are ever going to be checked. Among these are C. O. D. deliveries, hundreds of which are refused weekly in the large cities, thus subjecting the stores to the expense of delivering and bringing back the goods, and which, if when accepted, are often the source of actual loss through the small value of the merchandise involved.

Approval deliveries, the bulk of which meet the same fate as many of the C. O. D. goods, and deliveries of trivial orders received by telephone, local mail, or messenger come under the head of "evils" from one point of view, though from another they are wholly legitimate. A great many of these would be done away with, without serious loss to any store, it is contended, by charging for deliveries, but more than all of this, it is asserted that delivery fees would strike a hard blow at one of the worst evils of all—the illegitimate return of merchandise sold in good faith. Most of this, it has been asserted over and over again, can be laid at the doors of charge customers, many or whom not only shop for fun or to "kill time," but are addicted to "bluff shopping," which means the buying of things, later to be returned, for the sake of impressing a friend or acquaintance. The checking of this evil alone, it is asserted, would more than save in effort and in dollars and cents whatever expenditures of this kind the selling of goods on a charge-for-delivery basis would entail.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

Considerable Activity Shown, with Prices Tending Upward.

The Japanese raw silk market was full of surprises in the last week. It gradually declined at the beginning, to the extent of 170 yen per picul, but recovered 60 yen at the end. The last cable from Yokohama stated that the market there was very strong, with large buying and prices advancing rapidly. The visible stock has been reduced to about 7,500 bales, which are poorly assorted. Reelers are not very anxious to sell new silks for July or later shipment, as they anticipate higher prices in the near future. The situation looks very strong, according to A. P. Villa & Brothers, Inc., and with such a large demand prices in that market are likely to go much higher.

The Canton market is somewhat disturbed by a rumor that the second crop is not as large as expected, on account of bad weather. While reelers have not changed their prices they are very firm in their views about them, especially as they have sold a good deal of the first, second, and third crops. The Shanghai market is quite active for all grades of silk. Of tsatlees alone, 1,300 bales have changed hands during the last few days. Steam filatures are also in good demand, and tussahs are bought at steadily increasing prices. It is reported that there will be a decided shortage in the steam filature crop on account of unfavorable conditions.

The Italian market remains unchanged, all of this silk being sold for European consumption. In this city business has broadened considerably and there have been numerous inquiries for raws. Manufacturers appear not to be oversupplied, as most of the demand is for June and July delivery. The present consumption of silk fabrics in this country is very large, and the industry is expected to remain prosperous for a long time to come.

NEWEST IN MILLINERY.

Georgette in Most Demand Among Fabric Hats This Season.

Of all the fabric hats that are popular this season Georgette is in the biggest demand, according to the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America. There is little doubt, the bulletin continues, that this material will continue to be the most popular feature of Summer millinery. It goes on:

"Wire or buckram frames are used to give a transparent or stiff effect, for in the transparent models these hats are more 'summery' and sell best. Accordion pleated or shirred brims, some with soft edges, are very popular. Crowns are draped, shirred, accordion pleated, stiff or high and soft. Most frequently seen are large shapes with drooping brims, large and medium mushrooms, short-back pokes, shapes with short backs and front and wide sides, and large sailors. Trimmings of fringe, tassels, beads, satin, and grosgrain ribbon bows are favored. Popular colors are navy, navy and white, all-white, pearl gray, shell or pastel pink.

"For Summer dress hats, Fifth Avenue modistes are introducing black maline. The entire hat is made of maline, some with soft edges or accordion pleating. Crowns are soft and without linings, showing the hair. The shapes are practically the same as seen in other Summer hats. The trimmings used are jet ornaments and bugle or round beads in bright colors, which are placed around the edge of the brim, around the crown or drooping from the edge of the lower brim in Spanish effect. These hats are dressy, and, even though they are offered in black, are well adapted for wear with soft Summer frocks."

Pile Fabric Coats Wanted.

Buyers now in town looking for Fall coats for women are said to be very favorably inclined toward pile fabric garments. Some very substantial orders for such coats have already been placed, and there is said to be every indication that pile fabrics are to be among the leading Fall coat materials. The models which have resulted in the most business so far are made up on long loose lines, with many individual and original treatments of details. Buyers are said to be very optimistic over the Fall outlook for coat business, and many of them are reported as saying that they will be back soon to look over cloth coats.

Gray Goods Sales Limited.

With the coming of warmer weather the usual Summer dullness of the gray goods market here on Saturdays is beginning to manifest itself. This was apparent in the dearth of important business done yesterday. Among the few interesting sales made were spot and June lots of Eastern 38½-inch 60-48s, which sold at 10¾ cents. In the coarse-yarn cloths July-August deliveries of 36-inch 5.50-yard sheetings were sold at 15½ cents, while for the same month 17½ cents was paid for 5-yard sheetings in that width. Both constructions are scarce here and are not easy to buy at the prices given.

Late Dress Business Good.

Reorders for dresses from merchants all over the country have been very substantial, according to reports from a number of dress manufacturers in this city. White and printed voiles seem to have enjoyed a high degree of popularity this season, and organdies are also well taken. Cotton rep has been good in simple little wash dresses, and seems to be particularly popular with women in business. Net frocks are also in demand. In all the materials mentioned white has been a great favorite this season.

24-Hour Clock for Switzerland.

The system of numbering the hours from 1 to 24, beginning at midnight, is to be established in Switzerland after the return of normal conditions, but not before May 1, 1919. According to Vice Consul Frank Bohr, in Zurich, the Swiss Federal Council recently passed a decree to this effect, specifically mentioning as affected by the new ruling the Swiss transportation systems, the telegraph systems, the Customs Service, all Federal Government works, and other institutions under Government management.

BUSINESS NOTES.

The offices of Harry C. Lyon and J. Newman, Jr., have been removed to the eleventh floor of the St. James Building, Broadway at Twenty-sixth Street. The offices of the out-of-town accounts that Mr. Lyon buys for have been removed to the same rooms.

The Sexton Manufacturing Company, makers of union suits, &c., have removed their local office from 1,181 Broadway to the St. James Building, 1,133 Broadway. Max Richards continues in charge.

The New York delegates to the annual convention of the National Association of Credit Men, which is to be held in Chicago next month, will leave the Grand Central Terminal in this city at 9:30 A. M. on Sunday, June 16, arriving in Chicago on Monday morning at 8:30. The headquarters of the convention will be the Hotel La Salle.

A SHOE DEALER'S VIEW OF PRICES

His Contention That the Increase to the Consumer Has Not Been Unduly Big.

"There has been a great deal of criticism of the retail shoe merchants of the country during the last few years," said John Slater of the firm of J. & J. Slater of this city and President of the Retail Shoe Dealers' Association of New York, "and at each increase in the range of prices we have been subjected to fresh outbursts of unfavorable comment, including accusations of flagrant profiteering. From time to time, various statements have been made by people who are not at all familiar with the facts which, while they are absurd to those of us in the trade who know conditions, are, nevertheless, very misleading to the general public.

"For instance, when the prices on raw leather recently reacted about 10 to 20 cents a pound, many people outside of the trade immediately jumped to the conclusion that the price of a pair of shoes would be substantially lower. Unfortunately, this could not have been the case even had the 10 to 20 cent reduction in raw stock not later been wiped out by new advances. But changes of these proportions in the value of untanned leathers do not amount to more than a few cents in the cost of the finished shoe.

"While raw leather is sold by the pound, tanned leather is sold by the square foot. In one pound of leather there are anywhere from five to ten square feet of stock, depending on the thickness of the material sold. Fine leather is quoted today at from 75 cents to $1 a square foot. To cut a woman's shoe eight and one-half inches high, about five square feet of leather are required. In a shoe which is made to retail for $12 the leather, at an average price of 87 cents a square foot, will amount to $4.35. The leather used in such a shoe is usually of light weight and runs about ten square feet to the pound. Thus, one-half pound of leather is required for this sort of a shoe. It is readily seen, therefore, that changes of 10 or 20 cents a pound in raw stock prices will make but very little difference in the cost to the retailer or to the consumer who uses the finished product.

"On the other hand, labor costs, overhead and merchandising expenses, as well as prices on all materials other than leather which are used in making shoes, are mounting higher almost daily. We are all familiar with the scarcity of labor and the independence of the workers that are left who know that they can get profitable employment in various war industries if they do not get what they want in their own trade. Business men also know that overhead and merchandising costs, especially the latter, have risen anywhere from 7 to 12 per cent. during the recent past.

"Most of the retail dealers in shoes of the medium and better grades are now forced to figure their total cost of doing business at between 30 and 35 per cent. of their turnover, and in some few cases it may run even higher than this. When you figure that, out of a lot of, say, 225 pairs of shoes, a merchant will in all probability not sell more than 150 at the regular price, the balance at reductions of graduated amounts, and the last few pairs perhaps even below cost, you can readily see that, unless he is very careful in his buying and unless he figures very closely, his margin at the end of the year will show a deficit instead of a profit.

"The question of turnovers in any retail undertaking is a vital one, and unless they are quick and frequent the business cannot be profitable. In most of the other branches of the retail trade there are from four or five to ten turnovers in the course of the year. In the retail shoe business any merchant who succeeds in accomplishing four turnovers during the year is the exception, and he is very lucky. Most of us must content ourselves with three, and some with even less. Partly for this reason there is no other line of retail business which shows such small profits at the end of the year. The best evidence of this is that there has never been any millionaire made by the retail shoe business alone. If a shoe merchant makes from 5 to 10 per cent. on his gross sales, he considers himself very fortunate. Few make more and a great many make less. Yet we are accused of profiteering.

"In other countries, and especially European countries both neutral and belligerent, shoe prices to consumers have undergone a very much greater proportionate advance since the war started in 1914 than they have in this country. In France, for instance, former $9 shoes are now $20 to $23 a pair. Many shoes in Russia are now $30 a pair. In Sweden, $25 is now charged for $11 shoes. Good shoes for both men and women are now being sold in this country for considerably less than double their old prices. Taking the shoe market as a whole, the general advance has not been much more than 33 1-3 per cent. There are, of course, exceptions, but these are usually only in the very fancy novelty lines for women.

"But I do not believe that present prices will last very much longer. Labor conditions and increased merchandising costs will compel further advances before very long. Even though leather prices may be stabilized by Government action of some sort, leather is, after all, only one item in the cost of a pair of shoes, and only amounts to about one-third their retail price, as for instance $4.35 in a $12 pair of women's boots, and even less in some other types of shoes. With the other items which go to make up the price of shoes constantly increasing leather would have to come down very much more than it will before it would help us any in reducing the cost of the finished product."

Australian Invoice Values.

The order of the Australian Controller of Customs, requiring a full statement in the invoice covering goods shipped to Australia of the value of those goods in the country of exportation at the date of the invoice, is to be strictly enforced after June 30 on all shipments subject to ad valorem duties, according to a statement of the official representative of the Australian Department of Trade and Customs in this city.

DEALINGS IN BROAD SILKS.

Disposition to Buy in Anticipation of Further Advances.

The local market for broad silks is reported to be strong with a tendency toward higher prices. There have been further advances during the last week or ten days in the quotations of certain of the more popular shades and weaves, but they do not seem to have curtailed business to any appreciable extent. Contrary to the general expectation, every advance so far seems to have been followed by renewed buying activity, merchants apparently attempting to anticipate further advances later on.

Satins and taffetas are reported to be among the most generally sought weaves for next Fall and Winter, and are bought in large quantities, both by the retail trade and by large cutters. Foulards are also wanted, though not to quite such an extent as satins and taffetas. In all weaves more or less staple colorings seem to be preferred. There is said to be a slight tendency toward more subdued shades and the less glaring designs and color combinations, but as yet it is not so pronounced as to be considered general.

Georgette crêpes and crêpe de chines, which have advanced anywhere from 5 to 15 cents a yard, are conspicuous in Fall business. Many of the very best qualities in these weaves are wanted, and it is said that the price advances are paid without question.

NEW SUITS FOR WOMEN.

Attractions of Those Being Shown for the Coming Season.

The more "dressy" suits for women now seen here are being made in many different shades with a red basis, such as terra cotta, Burgundy, and ruby, according to the organ of the National Garment Retailers' Association. Also many suits of heavy silk, well lined and combined with wool, have found their way to the manufacturers' racks. The bulletin goes on:

"Pockets on the skirts and belts of nearly every description are features of the newest numbers. Yokes being seen on so many skirts, it is safe to predict that they will also be seen largely during the coming season. A great deal of thought and time has been spent in the study of pocket features, and a great variety of them is shown.

"Mole gray Lapin duvet de laine trims a beautiful suit of graceful lines in the latest decree from Paris—of old blue tricotine in unusually wide wale. A narrow yoke on the skirt is longer at the hips than in front, and has two pocket slits. A suit of plaid velour with dull shades of terra cotta, green and old blue, is striking, not only because of its lines but also because of the beauty of the material. The coat is long, extending below the knees, and has several fine tucks on the side. The upper coat is surplieed in effect, and tucks as narrow as those on the peplum inserted under the armpit take away the tight-fitting effect. The sash fastens in the back with large leather buttons.

Tax on Salesmen in Argentina.

The matter of replacing the various separate provincial taxes on commercial travelers in Argentina by a single tax for the entire country has again come up for discussion, according to Commercial Attaché Robert S. Barret in Buenos Aires. The proposal is indorsed by the leading newspapers of Buenos Aries, which point out that the overcentralization of Argentina's business, making Buenos Aires the centre of commerce, is largely due to the old system which has tended to keep commercial travelers out of the interior of the country. It is thought that a law requiring these "commercial missioneries" to pay one tax to the Federal Government which would permit them to take their samples anywhere in the country would do a great deal toward developing the business of the entire country more evenly.

Pinch Coming in 1919.

"Though materials are scarce this year," said a large manufacturing jobber of this city yesterday, "most of us are fairly well taken care of for next Fall, and even for next Spring. Most of the large jobbers and manufacturers have managed to keep their stocks of fabrics pretty well up until now. Henceforth, however, we are going to have to cut into these surplus materials more and more, and I am very much afraid that by this time next year we are going to be in a pretty bad way for supplies. With a constantly growing army and navy Government requirements are bound to continue to increase as they have been doing in the past and, if the situation in fabrics is bad now, it is bound to be worse later on."

Fall Skirts Appearing.

In the separate skirt trade, as well as in coats and suits, offerings for next Fall are making their appearance and buyers are said to be dropping in to look things over. In some instances it is reported that quite a few orders have already been placed. In such cases, however, it seems to have been chiefly in more or less staple lines that the business was done. Plain and neat looking serge skirts for business wear are expected to be among the big sellers during next Fall and Winter, and there is already a demand for garments of this sort.

MUSIC SHOW TO COME.

Evolution of the Piano Will Be Shown in It by Exhibits.

The important place of music in wartime will be emphasized at the National Music Show, which is to be held at the Grand Central Palace from June 1 to 8, and which will include among its exhibits a piano imported into this country by the first John Jacob Astor. The entire receipts are to be expended for the purchase of musical instruments, records, and player rolls for the American soldiers and sailors abroad and in training camps on this side of the Atlantic. Special attention will be given to martial music in the exhibits and the accompanying demonstrations and lectures. Various types of pianos, ranging from those made in the period when the city's retail stores centred around Maiden Lane and William Street, and the Battery was the fashionable promenade, to the present time. Among them will be an "Astor" piano, first brought into this country by the original John Jacob Astor, stenciled with his name, and sold on the installment plan in company with a second-hand collection of furs. This piano figured in what is contended to be the first advertisement of an instrument of this kind in this city. It was published in The Daily Advertiser of Jan. 10, 1780, and read:

J. J. Astor, at No. 81 Queen Street, (now a part of Pearl Street,) next door but one to the Friends' Meeting House, has for sale an assortment of Piano Fortes of the newest construction, made by the best makers in London, which he will sell on reasonable terms. He gives Cash for all kinds of Furs, and has for sale a quantity of Canada Beaver and Beaver Coatings, Raccoon Skins, Muskrat Skins, &c., &c.

The piano to be exhibited is the property of William P. H. Bacon, whose ancestors obtained it from Mr. Astor three generations ago. From this small instrument with eight legs the coming exhibition will show the evolution of the piano through the little five-octave instruments with spindle legs and big brass castors, through the baby grand, which dropped two of its legs in the process, to the present day "of player pianos, electric pianos, and other devices for ready-made music.

The show, which will be opened by Governor Whitman, and which will be simultaneous with the holding of several important music trade conventions, will be held under the auspices of the Music Trade Exhibitors' Association. It will occupy two floors of the Palace. The Show Committee consists of G. W. Gittins of the Estey Piano Company, C. E. Conway of the Hallet & Davis Piano Company, J. A. Le Cato of the Standard Pneumatic Action Company, H. L. Willson of the Columbia Phonograph Company, and William Maxwell of Thomas A. Edison, Inc. This committee will handle the receipts of the show, and, according to an announcement made yesterday, will make an accounting to all interested persons.

Exports from Dutch East Indies.

Licenses for exports to the United States from the Dutch East Indies are to be freely granted on all commodities on the embargo lists, according to a recent dispatch from Consul General Fuller in Padang, Sumatra. Consul Fuller states that the Governor General has informed him that permission to resume the American service is now being granted. No general conditions of issuance of licenses have been determined upon, each case being settled upon its own merits. Tin landed before the promulgation of the embargo, it is said, does not require a license. It was expected that the regular fortnightly mail would be resumed about May 18.

Men's Ties Are Selling.

Men's ties, like men's shirts, are reported to be selling in much larger quantities than any in the trade had expected they would. Bow ties are said to be increasing their popularity everywhere, particularly in the Middle West. Four-in-hands are not neglected, however, and are taken in a number of bright color combinations as well as in solid colors. Foulards are being used a great deal both in these and in bow ties. Dark backgrounds and white or light colored polka dots seem to be among the most favored designs. Many very beautiful silks also appear in the latest offerings.

THE WAR AND PROBLEMS OF A WORLD PEACE

H. G. Wells, Professor Morris Jastrow, Jr., Walter E. Weyl, and W. H. Dawson Anticipate Questions That Will Be Discussed at the End of the Great Conflict

IN THE FOURTH YEAR: Anticipations of a World Peace. By H. G. Wells. New York: The Macmillan Company.

THE END OF THE WAR. By Walter E. Weyl. New York: The Macmillan Company.

THE WAR AND THE COMING PEACE. By Morris Jastrow, Jr. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company.

PROBLEMS OF THE PEACE. By William Harbutt Dawson. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

THESE four books are all concerned with a similar theme, the nature of the settlement to be made after the war, and certain phases of that peace settlement they envisage in a similar way. All four of them agree upon certain desirable principles that must be fundamentally fixed in the conclusions of that time and all four are anxious that the peoples of the world should begin to think already about these principles and to devise means that will insure their being made the basis of peace. But, notwithstanding these similar essentials, the books are so utterly different in material, in method, and in point of view that they merely supplement one another in their treatment of these questions and frequently are more or less at variance upon important matters. Two of the authors, Mr. Weyl and Professor Jastrow, are Americans and the two others are Englishmen. One of them, Mr. Dawson, is moderate in his ideas and somewhat conservative in his viewpoint. Two others are radicals and, in more or less degree, internationalists. Mr. Weyl wants to see America play a leading part. Professor Jastrow, as a historian and moralist, is deeply concerned with the moral issue involved in both war and peace. Mr. Dawson writes from the standpoint of an Englishman, and Mr. Wells is—as always—H. G. Wells. But they are all agreed upon the necessity that the peace shall be a democratic peace that will conserve and further democratic aims, the welfare of the peoples rather than of Governments, and international amnity.

Mr. Wells's book is chiefly concerned with the idea of a League of Free Nations as the outcome of the war and the surety of continued peace after the war. He discusses the nature, as to the representatives which would make it, of such a league, its powers, monarchy and imperialism in their real relation to it and labor's interests in connection with it, and urges the necessity of beginning to prepare for its formation and its program. He believes that, aside from the winning of the war, the furtherance of this idea is the most important thing before the world today. "Today," he says, after noting how utopian the idea would have seemed in 1913, "the project has an air not only of being so practicable, but of being so urgent and necessary and so manifestly the sane thing before mankind that not to be busied upon it, not to be making it more widely known and better understood, not to be working out its problems and bringing it about, is to be living outside the contemporary life of the world."

In discussing the nature of such a league Mr. Wells considers the formation of the United States and the relations between its States and its Federal Government as offering a model which might be successfully copied more or less closely. He also thinks that in our electoral college—concerning whose present-day practical importance in our scheme of government he holds some innocent and surprising opinions—might be found a suggestion for the choosing of delegates to an Allied Council, to the Peace Congress, and later to the hoped-for Council of a League of Nations. His purpose in these suggestions is to start discussion upon the idea of electoral representation in these bodies. And he follows with some cutting gibes upon the interest which, he says, "titled ladies," "dinner parties," and London society in general are taking in the question of "Who is to go?" To such activities Mr. Wells responds with an emphatic "No!" and declares that "the bulk of British opinion cannot go on being represented by President Wilson."

Throughout the book Mr. Wells over and over again voices his admiration for President Wilson, his confidence in his statesmanship, his democracy, and his leadership. He calls attention also to the fact that the political system which placed the President in this position of world leadership had previously produced other statesmen of a high order of ability. President Wilson, he declares, "is one of a series of figures who tower over their European contemporaries." And he says that "it is to the United States of America that we must look now if a world is to be made 'safe for democracy.' It is to the method of selection, as distinguished from delegation, that we must look if democracy is to be saved from itself."

Mr. Wells draws especial attention to the danger which he thinks threatens the character of the peace that will end the war and menaces the League of Nations idea in the imperialistic ambitions of the European nations. He finds this danger lurking in the prepossessions, the old ways of envisaging the world, and the old manner of thought of those who assume to be the governing classes in Europe, and he calls upon all who really believe in democracy to come forward and make it known that the democratic peoples will have no more of imperialism. He takes the British Government to task because it has not held out inducements to the German people to turn its face toward democracy and revolution and declares quite plainly that there is an anti-democratic wing of aristocratic opinion in England which has exerted itself to prevent a revolutionary movement in Germany and has prevented adequate recognition of the revolution in Russia. And throughout he pleads the cause of the League of Nations idea with all his well-known vigor, daring, forcefulness, and unconventionality. Several chapters are devoted to a discussion of the idea of democracy, with the purpose of defining the term and calling attention to the necessity of propaganda in its favor. But it is as a forceful argument for the establishment of a League of Free Nations and for seeing to it at once that such a league shall be under democratic control rather than under that of men of the old-style diplomatic school, and as a vigorous setting forth of the alternative, that Mr. Wells's new book challenges and merits attention.

Mr. Weyl's book suffers much from its preface—"Postscript," the author calls it, as if it was written after the rest of the volume and apparently only about two months ago. "Indiscretion" is too mild a word to apply to it, and the publishers would do well to remove it from subsequent editions. The ordinary reader, possessing average knowledge and average interest in his country, is likely to be so incensed by its unwarranted assumptions stated as facts and its perverted viewpoint that he will throw the book down, at once deciding that the author is utterly untrustworthy. And that would be, after all, unfortunate, because Mr. Weyl, when he finally gets down to the heart of the matter, has some sobering and important things to say concerning the war and the results of the war and the necessity that we in America fix our determination upon definite things to be won by our participation in it. A single sentence from the second page of this preface will give an idea of its spirit: "During the six months from April 1 until Oct. 1, 1917, and even afterward, the war might have been concluded on the basis of internationalism and democracy." If Mr. Weyl has ever had any information that would show that at any time since the beginning of the war the ruling dynasty and military lords of Germany were ready to turn over their powers to the people, or that the people were willing to try to make them do so, it was his duty to hand it over to the President of the United States and the Premiers of England and France, who would have been delighted beyond words to receive it. It has been very thoughtless and inconsiderate of him to keep such important knowledge hidden away for promulgation in the preface of a book. If he will leave his isolated study, make the round of the cantonments of the American Army and talk with the men who are setting forth to help do that very job and with their relatives who are being left behind, he will find that nothing less than such a result, the only result upon which the war can be concluded on "the basis of internationalism and democracy," will be accepted by the American people.

Not only the preface but a large part of the book itself is marred by similar perversions of fact and spirit. It would be interesting, for instance, to know where Mr. Weyl found the "many Americans" whom he alleges to hold fantastic opinions concerning the war and its purpose. They sound as if they might have come from a Morris Hillquit meeting on the east side of New York, before that region had begun to see daylight through the eyes of its drafted sons, returning on furlough from the democratizing influences of Camp Upton.

Throughout the book Mr. Weyl, because, doubtless, of his training as an economist, is inclined to the material viewpoint and does not take sufficient account of factors that have to do chiefly with the spirit and aspirations of mankind. But that is the fault of the school of thought to which he belongs and must be accepted as one of the things for which due allowance must be made by the reader. It leads him in his account of the influences that have made Germany what she was when she plunged the world into war to ignore the influence of German philosophy by which generation after generation has been trained to believe in material force. Nor does he accord its due importance to the methods of the German Government, in use for a quarter-century or more, in the pouring out upon the German people through printing presses, pulpits, and schools, of the propaganda that has had an enormous power in the molding of the nation to the purposes of its overlords. Too many of Mr. Weyl's pages are taken up with discussions of possibilities that the rush of events have already rendered impossible or unlikely, and with suppositions, that, thus far, have been refused serious con-

LATEST WORKS OF FICTION

THE PRETTY LADY. By Arnold Bennett. George H. Doran Company. $1.50 net.

Of the revelations concerning human nature, its heights and its depths, which the war has made, very many writers have written. To some the revelation has seemed one of splendors heretofore undreamed of, a revelation of courage, generosity, self-sacrifice, high heroism, of the triumph of the spirit over the flesh. Others, on the contrary, have seen it as a revelation of the persistence of the brute in man, a triumph of the animal wants and needs of life. Mr. Arnold Bennett, judging from his latest novel, "The Pretty Lady," belongs to neither of these two classes. He declares

Arnold Bennett.

"the revelation of what human nature actually was" to be "the supreme lesson of the war," and that the solace of the lesson "lay in the fact that human nature must be substantially the same throughout the world." To those of us who remember what happened in Louvain and in Northern France, who have not forgotten the Lusitania and have heard something about the kind of treatment Germans give their prisoners, the "lesson" that Americans, for instance, are "substantially the same" as the Huns, will scarcely seem one of any especial solace.

The book opens in London during the early days of the war, and is principally concerned with an "affaire" between a French courtesan, Christine, and an elderly English bachelor, G. J. Hoape, called by his friends G. J., who had "casually known hundreds of courtesans." He was well off, an idler, useless, but apparently irresistibly—and to the reader, quite inexplicably—fascinating to women. There are two besides Christine who play important parts in the novel—Lady Queenie Paulle and her friend Concepcion, "the celebrated Concepcion Iquist." All three are in love with G. J.; he is the central character, the one through whose eyes the reader sees most of the incidents which occur—incidents of a somewhat detached kind, related with considerably less of detail than one is accustomed to expect from Mr. Bennett. The best described and most interesting of these are the ones which are more or less apart from the book's characters, incidents with which they chanced to be concerned, but which could have existed quite as well without them. Lord Roberts's funeral at St. Paul's is an impressive picture; the Zeppelin raid, though it serves in great measure as a background for Lady Queenie's white-clad, ecstatically defiant figure, is thoroughly convincing, while the rough narrative of Nurse Smaith, who was in the Serbian retreat, is an artistic bit of work.

The novel has in it, indeed, much that is well done. Especially good are the characters of Christine and of Concepcion, the courtesan and the leader of London's semi-intellectual "smart set," both of whom are carefully drawn and analyzed. Of the two portraits, Christine's is the more detailed. Her "temperament," her narrowness of outlook, her clinging to self-justification and to a certain queer kind of semi-respectability, her touches of childishness, her view of her "profession" and the strong vein of superstition which controls so much of her life and finally robs her of the joy and contentment of being "among her own furniture," make her an interesting and real figure. She had been "quite fairly successful in her London career. Hundreds of men had caressed her, and paid her with compliments and sweets and money"; but that streak of half-mystical superstition which served her in lieu of a conscience proved her undoing. Contrasted with, yet in some ways not altogether unlike her, is Concepcion, who had "a masculine mind," a quick wit, and more than a touch of philosophy. Alone among the characters of the book, Concepcion had what may fairly be called ideals, and it was her tragedy that she could not live up to them. Both in love and in work, she failed; she could not, as she had sworn she would, "see the thing through," and despite her sensationalism and love of the theatrical, that failure wins her the reader's pity. Pity, not liking; there is not a likable character in the book. Still, one feels that Concepcion deserved a rather better fate than the one to which the author assigns her.

The novel presents a picture of London in wartime which is not exactly inspiring. Possibly because Mr. Bennett's very unheroic hero, G. J. Hoape, is himself a self-satisfied, small-souled, vain, and selfish man, and it is through his eyes that we look, the other people all seem small. The members of the Hospital Committee, the crowd that gathers at the picture exhibition and at the Coroner's inquest, are either stolid poseurs or sensation seekers. And, from beginning to end, the novel is literally steeped in "sex." Three officers, returned from the front on leave, appear in the course of the narrative. Of these three, one is a drunkard and a "client" of Christine's, and the other two spend the last night of their leave, the last night before they return "out there," in a particularly notorious night-club with two disreputable women. Christine, with her professional allures and her numerous "clients," is scarcely more sensual than Concepcion or Lady Queenie of the "lax mouth and cynical eyes" and crude imitation of a famous dancer's performance as Salome, while of G. J. one of the characters says, "I never saw a man develop as you have. Marriage isn't for you. You ought to roam in the primeval forest and take and kill"—a description which greatly flatters G. J.'s abundant vanity. The members of the committee are bored and indifferent, taking small interest in the business before them, until a question comes up about the relations of nurses and doctors in their hours of relaxation, which admits of a possibly scandalous interpretation.

"The Pretty Lady" is written in a style unlike Mr. Bennett's accustomed one, a style less given to minutiae, more inclined to the impressionistic. The slight story, which serves principally as a thread upon which to hang the descriptions and the character analysis is related in a number of chapters, most of them very brief and in a manner not quite so leisurely as is usual with Mr. Bennett. There is, of course, more than a little clever phrasing, as when G. J., in one of his decent moments, becomes aware of his own futility: "It was as if he had been training himself for twenty years in order to be futile in a crisis requiring crude action." This early in the book; but though we are later told that on the Hospital Committee G. J. found "a task which suited him and which was genuinely useful," this impression of him as a futile person is the one which remains impressed upon the reader's mind.

THE LONELY STRONGHOLD

THE LONELY STRONGHOLD. By Mrs. Baillie Reynolds. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.35.

Written in a style that would have charmed readers of fifty years ago, rather long drawn out and extremely improbable, with a strikingly unique setting for its chief interest, Mrs. Baillie Reynolds's new novel, "The Lonely Stronghold," will prove readable to a great many people.

It is the story of Olwen Innes, a young girl who, "fed up," as the English say, with her work in a bank, takes a post as companion in a lonely pelle, or fortress, which its owners, the Guyse family, have converted into a more or less habitable abode. During the course of a few weeks she becomes involved in a love affair with Ninian Guyse, the son of the woman whose companion she is. A large amount of mystery surrounds the pelle owing partly to the attempted suicide of the girl who had preceded Olwen Innes as companion and partly to a strange Indian servant, who tries to administer love potions and mixes up in affairs generally. The existence of Ninian's twin brother, Wilfred, further entangles an already complex plot.

Mrs. Reynolds has assumed a victorious ending of the war for the Allies, and the final scenes of the novel are laid about the London home which a large and unexpected fortune from her father has enabled Olwen to obtain and use as a hospital during the war. Ninian, whom Olwen has loved secretly throughout these years, returns after having been a prisoner since the beginning of the war, broken in health but faithful in heart.

One of the most characteristic scenes is the one in which Olwen and her lover are reunited after their years of misunderstanding and separation when Olwen comes upon him at an opportune moment as he sits caressing a lock of her hair and grieving over her picture, or "photo," as the author rather surprisingly terms it. After a series of complications a happy conclusion is reached.

THE PANAMA PLOT

THE PANAMA PLOT. By Arthur E. Reeve, with frontispiece. Harper & Brothers $1.40 net.

Our old friend, Craig Kennedy, betakes himself to South America, and there, as was to be expected, has many adventures. Later, however, he decides that the United States is in need of his services, and back he comes, to confound German spies and spread terror in the ranks of evildoers generally. The first of the exploits related in this volume is "The Panama Plot," and has to do with certain serious and inexplicable slides in the famous Culebra Cut. A moving picture company, a wealthy Panamanian, and a clever and courageous young school teacher from New York help to complicate a mysterious affair which also contains two love stories. Having solved this riddle, Craig Kennedy goes to Trinidad, arriving there just in time to unravel another mystery, the mystery concerning "a beautiful woman—dead in a hotel—no clue whether it is suicide or murder," as the excited head of the police informs him. This matter being satisfactorily disposed of, Craig proceeds to Rio Janeiro, where an attempt to smuggle a huge black diamond, the rivalry between two "queens of the music hall," and a murder are twisted together into a snarl which is altogether too much even for the very competent police of Rio Janeiro, though not, of course, for Craig Kennedy. Another tale has to do with a German plot to bring about a South American revolution, while others merely involve murder.

Once back in the United States, however, it is German plots and German spies which demand most, if not all, of Craig Kennedy's attention. A plot to destroy the crops, a series of explosions in a shipyard, and the affair of the "Black Cross," in object as in color the very antithesis of the Red Cross—these are one and all encountered and disposed of, one after the other, with the scientific detective's invariable success.

GREAT GHOST STORIES

GREAT GHOST STORIES. Selected by Joseph Lewis French. With a foreword by James H. Hyslop, LL. D., Secretary of the Society for Psychical Research. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

Here is a thrilling collection of ghost stories, famous old tales some of them, bits of horror, narratives that ring the changes on the "ghost theme" in general. Every one of them is worth the attention of any one who enjoys ghost stories, and will hold the reader's interest spellbound to the end. Yet this little sheaf of tales, many of which are, so to speak, "classics" of an older day, has a significance not inconsiderable as commentary on ghost stories old and new. Says Dr. Hyslop in his introduction:

> Ghost stories lend themselves well to fiction. They leave the imagination entirely free. * * * We may read them without demanding that they shall conform to our sense of reality and without expecting science to restrain the imagination. * * * Perhaps in this age, when we are beginning to break down the barriers which science has set to the imagination, and this by an expansion of science itself, we may find the salvation of both the intellect and the will. However this may be, with apparitions a proved fact, and on any theory not due to chance in all instances, the fancies of the ones may prove to have been founded in fact, however dressed to suit the purposes of literary art.

As a matter of fact, one cannot read the twelve excellent and absorbing stories in this book without realizing that in this latter day we have come to make certain demands of ghost stories. We do not go so far as to require an approach to "realism"—though more than one modern writer adopts a markedly realistic form in dealing with the supernatural in fiction—but we do ask more than gratuitous horrors, apparitions, warnings, harrowing of emotional response; we do want a ghost story, (the word is used here as it is used in the book, in the wide sense of fiction based on supernatural happenings,) to fasten on, if not to our actual belief or our articulated questioning, certainly to our thought. It is not enough to be thrilled and harried with tales of clanking chains and spiritualistic visitations; intellect as well as emotion demands a part in our interest; we want a certain motivation, a certain consistency; in other words, we want something to think about as well as to feel; we have traveled far from the materialistic shudders of the Gothic romance.

So it is that this collection of older tales, even though it includes the vampire horror of Gautier's "Clarimonde" and the moving artistry of Quiller-Couch's "Roll-Call of the Reef," has for the most part a curious quality of removal from a public brought up on—to name only a few—"The Mark of the Beast," "The Turn of the Screw," Mrs. Wharton's "Afterwards" and "The Triumph of Night," Arthur Machen's recent story, "The Terror," Algernon Blackwood's work. All of these "Great Ghost Stories" are thrilling; some are very horrible; few are really intriguing; few haunt us long.

One of the stories in the present book that is challenging as well as interestingly "awful" is Thomas Hardy's "The Withered Arm," wherein a woman unconsciously brings evil upon the girl who has, as unconsciously, wronged her. "The Open Door," by Mrs. Oliphant, is a pathetic and very human variation on the haunted house theme, a theme which is very differently treated by Bulwer-Lytton in "The House and the Brain." In "The Mysterious Sketch," by Erckmann-Chatrian, and "The Deserted House," by Ernest Theodor Hoffmann, young men are chosen for no discoverable reason to be played upon by supernatural forces, and in "The Four-Fifteen Express," an exceedingly interesting story by Amelia B. Edwards, the casual acquaintance of a murdered man becomes amazingly the agent by which the crime is run to earth. The other stories in the book are "Green Branches," by Fiona Macleod; "The Were-Wolf," by H. B. Marryatt; "The Stalls of Barchester Cathedral," by Montague James Rhodes, and "What Was It?" by Fitz-James O'Brien.

GREEN AND GAY

GREEN AND GAY. By Lee Holt. John Lane Company. $1.40 net.

A CHARMING little story of a convent-hospital and what happened therein is this new novel by Lee Holt. It is also a story of the present time and of certain phases of the war; for this hospital, supported and directed by Madame la Marquise de Sarigny and attached to a convent of nursing sisters, received wounded soldiers. It is with the coming of a fresh company of these wounded that the story opens, one of the new arrivals being a young man whose head had been terribly hurt. At first they thought he would die, but he recovered—to a certain extent; the injury left him dumb and with his memory so impaired that he did not know either his name or his nationality, and had to be taught to read and write. The Marquise believed him to be an Englishman; he certainly was not French, and though every one, or nearly every one, liked him, the fact remained that when found he had been wearing a German coat, while the heavy blonde beard which won him the nickname of "Barbe Blonde," by which he is known until the very end of the book, gave added color to the suggestion that he might after all be a boche.

When the book is closed what one remembers best are the figures of that lovely and most gracious lady, Madame de Sarigny, her dainty daughter Jargueline—heroine of the pretty love story—the sweet, naïve little nuns, and the pictures of the convent-hospital and its grounds. The daily life of the hospital, the pollus and nurses, the chat and gossip and little incidents which give verisimilitude to the whole, are all cleverly done.

THE HAPPY GARRET

THE HAPPY GARRET: The Recollections of Hebe Hill. Edited by V. Goldie. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50 net.

WERE this supposed autobiography a real one, its revelations would belong to the class of the impudently frank, which tacitly assumes that the reader, no more than the writer, is possessed of a conscience or of a sense of the fitness of things. Miss Hebe Hill, a young student of medicine, whose childhood had been cursed by a cruel and drunken mother, is introduced by a male acquaintance into an ultra-Bohemian club in London known as "The Happy Garret." She admits that she had at first > an almost uncontrollable longing to escape from this horrible attic, where people quarreled and drank and shouted, where girls lay openly and unashamedly in the arms of the men seated by them, and offered their mouths to be kissed, where men masqueraded as women, and little school girls danced frantically or amorously with loose, rowdy students and men about town.

"Curiosity," however, she declares, saved her from making a fool of herself, and in time she discovered the garret to be "a mere abode of harmless mirth and culture," and she thereupon became a regular "garret girl." How she lived openly with one man as a "spree," and lured another to the desertion of his wife and family, and his own ultimate undoing, she tells with an unashamed coolness which reminds the reader of certain passages in the autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini. Old theologians were given to grave speculation on the subject of the so-called "unpardonable sin," some contending with much plausibility that it consists in sinking to such a moral depth that the soul can no longer distinguish between good and evil. To just this condition Hebe Hill seems to have arrived in her early youth. Her devotion to her father is the one beautiful thing in her character. With his death the angel, which we are told may be found in all of us, seems to have taken wing and to have left her an absolutely unmoral person.

The story is clever. The supposed editor gives no asides, no comments. Hebe Hill, unabashed, tells her own tale. The style is a delight: each picture stands out, clear and vivid. Not altogether without Carlyle's feeling after reading Mirabeau's one novel, we ourselves are made free of the Happy Garret, and are sure that we should recognize any of its habitués, should we meet them. Naturally, such a meeting would hardly be "to edification," for the book holds not one admirable, nor even respectable, character, save a few of minor importance, who are promptly dismissed with a sneer, the moribund father being the least reprehensible of the protagonists. The heroine is as sensitive to niceties of diction as she is dense to corresponding niceties of behavior. We note "averse from," and other evidences of her care for "le mot juste."

THE SPY IN BLACK

THE SPY IN BLACK. By J. Storer Clouston. George H. Doran Company. $1.35 net.

THE principal defect of J. Storer Clouston's very entertaining and ingenious story, "The Spy in Black," lies in the fact that he has endowed the German Lieutenant who is one of its principal characters with too much of what we used to call ordinary decency for him to be at all a convincing person to the reader. That the Lieutenant of a German submarine, who must necessarily have been accustomed not merely to sinking merchant ships, but also to firing on lifeboats and stealing from their crews food, water, and such poor little personal possessions as they had managed to take with them, would have felt the slightest qualm over such a trifle as the treacherous murder of one English clergyman is far from credible.

The book opens at the moment when a German submarine lands him on this shore, and the narrative is related partly by Lieutenant von Belke himself, partly by an anonymous "editor." Having succeeded in reaching this island, equipped with a motor bicycle and a perfect knowledge of the English language, it was necessary for the Lieutenant to journey some thirty miles to the place where he was to meet a certain person of high rank in the German spy system, which person he would find in the garb of a clergyman. But of how they met, of the strange incident of the vanishing governess, of that equally peculiar one of the Captain of an English vessel, and of how the astuteness of a quick-witted and charming girl first nearly destroyed and then saved the entire situation, we do not intend to give even the faintest kind of a hint.

RANSOM!

RANSOM! By Arthur Somers Roche. George H. Doran Company. $1.35 net.

WHILE "Ransom!" is not quite so complicated and so thoroughly satisfactory a "thriller" as was Mr. Roche's earlier story of "Loot," it is an entertaining and swiftly moving narrative. The hero, Philip Waring, is suddenly deprived of his fortune in a manner which, though commonplace enough upon the surface, reveals on investigation several distinctly peculiar and puzzling factors. Why did Carey Haig, his trustee, pay out that very large sum of money just before he committed suicide? and who was the "Berg-

My Dear Rupert Hughes:

I said "no story can be as good as that title," but it is! "Long Ever Ago" is the best story you ever wrote—the best I've read in God knows when. It's simple, sweet, great! Full of little, heart-catching terms.

I wonder if more than a few people will know how fine a thing you've done. Many will read and feel its charm, yet not know it stands out from the last five or six thousand short stories that have been written in this country, and this one couldn't have been written in any other country, either.

SISTER CLARE. By M. Reynes-Monlaur. Translated by M. E. Arendrup. New York: Robert McBride & Co. $1.25.

HERE are some books with authentic information upon how the soldiers at the front are being influenced in their religious faith by their experiences and upon the effect that the war is having upon the church and the feeling toward it of the people at home. Dr. Maclean and Dr. Sclatter were both workers at the front, one with the Y. M. C. A. and the other with the Scottish Churches, and so they were in closest touch with the men of the British Army and knew how they were facing the test which war conditions give to their souls. In one of the largest of these camps weekly meetings were held by the chaplains at which the problems that confront both soldier and Church were discussed with great earnestness and entire freedom. These two authors took a prominent part in the discussions and the addresses which they delivered form this book. It is evident that both had been profoundly stirred in mind and soul by their contact with war on a colossal scale and their addresses show how deeply they had probed their own hearts and how they had felt to the bottoms of their souls the searching questions of the men in the ranks. The result is a curious freshness in the point of view, a new and unconventional realization of the significance of their convictions, that make the book, with its many illustrations of the tendency of religious thinking among the soldiers, one of unusual interest.

Sir W. Robertson Nicoll, editor of the British Weekly, has long been an important influence in English life. A leader of the Nonconformist Church, a goodly proportion of the religious public of Great Britain ever finds its convictions, desires, and aspirations voiced by him. In this book, composed of articles published in the British Weekly during the first two years of the war, he takes up various phases of religious needs in wartime, with especial reference to the part which prayer can play in the life of suffering individuals and nations. It is interesting and suggestive to note the gradually changing tone of his thought and feeling as the war progresses, and to see his righteous indignation flaming more and more brightly as the foe's iniquity becomes more and more apparent. But he does not ever, no matter how hot his indignation becomes, lose sight of the sins of England in the past or of the unrighteousness among her people. Toward the end he quotes with commendation from Dr. L. P. Jacks, who had said, "I can imagine nothing worse for my native land than another century of such a life as we were living before the war." And the author asks the English people if they are worthy of the sacrifice that their soldiers at the front are making for them.

Archdeacon Paterson-Smyth of Montreal, Canada, has collected in "God and the War" fourteen of his own sermons dealing with religious aspects of war conditions and war experiences. His method is to make clear the broad principles of righteousness and then to study in their light whatever moral problem born of the war he has chosen for his subject. Four of the sermons deal with "The Men Who Died in Battle," and offer the message of the Christian religion in answer to the charge of the sinful waste of so much human life.

Gipsy Smith's little book is a breezy compound of stories from the front, of religious experiences, of accounts of what the Y. M. C. A. is doing for the welfare of the soldiers, all told with an earnestness that sends them straight to the reader's heart and an unusual ability to express thought and feeling with point and pungency. His admiration of the British soldiers is very great and after telling some of the things that they and the peoples of France and Belgium have suffered he says: "And all that is for you and me! What sort of people ought we to be, do you suppose? Are we really worth — that?" It is the same idea insisted upon in Sir W. Robertson Nicoll's book. Gipsy Smith ends his little book with this sentence, in italics: "I thank God upon every remembrance of your boys."

Sister Clare was before the war a French nun in the Convent of Little Franciscan Sisters at Dinant, and when the German Army reached that fated town she went with the fleeing population, among the last to leave, a witness of many scenes of cruelty and horror. The author says that his account is true, that he has invented nothing. He has told the whole story with the most delicate art, and has made Sister Clare, through all her adventures and miseries and all the awful tragedies which she witnessed, a very living and a very sweet and spiritual figure. The climax of the account comes at Rheims when, after having suffered peril of death and many dangers and indignities from the German soldiers and witnessed many atrocities, she listens to the voice in her heart, quells her repulsion and goes to nurse and minister to the wounded German prisoners.

A. E. F.

THE A. E. F.: With General Pershing and the American Forces. By Heywood Broun. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

ACROSS the ocean just a little in front of the first ships of the American expeditionary force went Heywood Broun. He saw the American soldiers-to-be land at the unnamed French port. He went with them to Paris when on that July day last Summer the troops in khaki marched in a thin brown line through streaming, cheering French crowds of hundreds of thousands from the Invalides to the Tomb of Lafayette. He followed them to their camps in the Vosges hills and watched their training, their daily life, their fraternization with their French neighbors. And finally he went with them to the front line trenches, where they had their first taste of real war and was with them when they returned, veterans now, to the rest camp.

In his account of how both British and French officers trained the Americans he mentions the special success of the British methods, in which there was the constant effort to arouse the competitive spirit, thus adding snap to the work and developing speed and efficiency. The British taught them also how to organize recreation, and for this purpose utilized all manner of childish games and ludicrous play.

Mr. Broun touches lightly upon a certain jealousy of feeling that existed at the beginning between the officers of the regular army and the reserve, but he says that it was well sweated out of both of them in the hard work they did during the Summer. And there is a chapter about a regiment of railroad engineers in which one little story caps the climax of all the many tales that have been told since the war started about the inability of the men of the new democratic armies to understand the necessity of certain formalities of discipline. A private in this regiment was arguing with his Captain about the disposition of some material in a new camp, and he said, very earnestly: "You've got the wrong dope about that, Bill." The officer glared at him and replied: "I've told you before about this discipline business, Harry. Any time you want to kick about my orders you call me mister."

The American soldiers Mr. Broun thought to be lacking in imagination, in the ability to visualize war conditions, to pretend in training and to feel that they were undergoing the real thing, as compared with the French, and he believes that this lack is distinctly a handicap in their training. But he tells admiringly of the aptitude of the Americans in getting the hang of the mechanism of the machine guns and automatic rifles and in the quickness with which they learn to use them with accuracy. There is a good deal about the part that music plays in the life of the soldier, and he makes it appear that the American Army needs a distinctive song to which it can march and with which it can cheer its life in camp.

"A charming romance of a girl who sought happiness at the foot of a rainbow—and found it in full measure and overflowing. A clean, sweet story told with fine art; a story to leave a pleasant taste lingering on one's mental palate. There are thrills in the story, too, and enough of mystery to satisfy and hold attention of any right-minded reader."—The New York Herald.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

ica. No old laws and customs burden this America. Again and again M. Rodriguez emphasizes the fact that liberty in America and in the countries of Europe is not the same thing. That there it means "a sentiment of security rather than an element of force." The European has known the heavy weight of the yoke and he seeks to be relieved of that weight, he wants the assurance of peace and happiness so far as it may be secured through political rights. The American threw off the yoke before it touched his neck. Liberty for him means self-assertion, the freedom to develop as he will, to fight as he will, to create for himself the life he wants—a life of action, of struggle. He wishes to be an individual in the sense that he must not be hampered in the path he chooses, either by custom or law. At the same time he is less jealous of his personal liberty than the Frenchman. He will let himself be ruled as to his moral side, he will permit interference in his personal conduct of life to an extent impossible to the French people.

This particular quality is dwelt on more strongly by Mr. Baldwin in his very interesting introduction than by the author of the book. The imposing upon the general mind of fanatical rules of right and wrong has survived Puritanism. An American submits to being told whether or not he may drink beer or wine, may play cards, may enjoy outdoor sports on Sunday. To the French mind there is something inconceivable in such an attitude. Paternalism in the law does not appeal to him.

There are chapters on the American man and the American woman that will be read, as such chapters are, with the interest that outlanders' judgments always arouse. And they are worth reading, for they put into brief form portraits of the two that are sympathetic without ceasing to be just, and that sum the salient characteristics which differentiate us, man and woman, from the European.

The chapters dealing with the President, with the law, with the internationalism of America, and with her army and the war are, of course, of a peculiar interest. They touch upon the very moment and reveal a conception of the highest duty to which we are giving ourselves, and of our realization of this duty, that must inspire every American reader with fresh determination to fulfill the destiny of this country as the individual will alone can fulfill it.

A book like this will do more to make the French and American peoples understand and admire each other, realize what is good in each, comprehend what is weak or bad, but not therefore incurable, and come closer together than even, it may be, the great fact that they are fighting side by side for the same future and the same ideals. It is written with that clarity, that grace and distinction which are inherently French, and also with the justice that is a part of the cultivated French mind—its devotion to truth.

OVER HERE

OVER HERE: Impressions of America by a British Officer. By Hector MacQuarrie, R. A., Cantab, Second Lieutenant, Royal Field Artillery. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. $1.35.

LIEUTENANT MACQUARRIE likes us; he also likes to tease us now and then. He is an active, breezy, open-eyed young man to whom his travels here have brought a real affection for his "cousins," as he calls us. His excellent "How to Live at the Front" has given us an admirable introduction to the young British officer; we feel already that we owe him much for the information and frank advice so brightly and sympathetically set forth in that book. In "Over Here" he is, for the most part, in a lighter mood; he narrates his experiences and impressions of many things in America; he admires us and criticises us with the same gay and likable humor; but he confesses, underneath it all, to "a definite hope that I shall succeed just a little in helping to cement a strong, intelligent friendship between the two great nations." Out of the war he sees rising, too, an understanding and comradeship between England and America.

His manner of seeing the United States—or a part of it—is in itself interesting. He has gathered most of his real knowledge of America and Americans neither from New York nor the West, but from Pennsylvania, and chiefly from Bethlehem, a field to which few foreigners go to collect impressions of "the States." Invalided home from Ypres, Lieutenant MacQuarrie was not allowed after his recovery to go back to the front, but was sent to this country and detailed especially to Bethlehem as an Inspector of Munition Production. Later he was "employed by Uncle Sam," as he puts it, to speak in various parts of the country on the war. His lecture tour of Pennsylvania is briefly and interestingly sketched at the close of the present book.

So he tells us of the great steel town—and of the older Moravian settlement. He chats pleasantly about country clubs and other features of American social life, and confesses his feeling of strangeness at the extreme sociability of the inhabitants of the American town, where "folk like to get together as much as possible." He disapproves of cocktail parties and expresses his surprise when he sees "nice girls" drinking cocktails, but he finds Americans generally attractive and their manners charming. American men, he says, "have better manners than we have, especially toward women." He has a good deal to say—most of it amusing—about American women and their apparent characteristics as wives. He notes that Americans dislike gossip. He tells travel experiences. His comments, impressions, experiences are delightful. We have many a laugh as we read his book.

UNDER THE RED CROSS

UNDER THE RED CROSS FLAG: At Home and Abroad. By Mabel T. Boardman, Chairman of the National Relief Board, American Red Cross. Second edition, with a foreword by President Wilson. With sixteen illustrations. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. $1.75.

THE new edition of Miss Boardman's book, which was first published in 1915, is of pertinent and timely interest. For the volume contains an added chapter—a brief summing up of the activities of the Red Cross here since our entry into the war. Says President Wilson in his foreword to this edition:

> I believe that this great organization will more and more enjoy the confidence and receive the support of the people of the United States as its purpose and methods become more widely known and more thoroughly understood. It seems to me very fortunate, therefore, that a book dealing with the history and achievements of the Red Cross should have been written by one so long familiar with its work as Miss Boardman, and I commend this book to the careful perusal of all who are interested in the development of the great work the Red Cross represents.

When Miss Boardman's book was first published no such record of Red Cross development and accomplishment was in existence. It remains from beginning to end an authoritative résumé that should be thoroughly read by Americans. Disclaiming the effort to produce a complete history of the organization and of relief work, she produced in this volume a valuable, succinct, and interesting story of the Red Cross, its origin and development, especially in our own country, and something of the work that it has done for humanity. In the new edition the last chapter brings the story in a significant sense "to date."

When the United States entered the war the membership of the American Red Cross increased almost twentyfold. Of some of the work that has been done Miss Boardman in the new chapter writes:

> Special commissions have been sent to various countries in Europe to study and report on the most urgent needs. Already, on their recommendations, funds have been placed at their disposal for the aid of our own forces in Europe, for our Allies' wounded, and for the relief of the civil populations of the devastated countries. At home a Sanitary Service, with a representative detailed from the Department of Public Health at its head, has been organized to look after sanitary conditions outside the camps, both for the benefit of the military and civil populations. A Supply Service has been established, with large warehouses in different parts of the country, for the collecting and distribution of purchased and donated supplies. * * * A well-organized chapter covers all fields of relief, and embraces all kinds of home service.

Miss Boardman goes on to explain the activities of the four important chapter sub-committees on Military Relief, Civilian Relief, Finance, and Women's Volunteer Aid, the Red Cross kitchens, and the other branches of Red Cross Service. Of the Home Service of the Civilian Relief Committee she writes:

> It gives to the men of our fighting forces the assurance that their families at home have a friend on whom they can rely not only for material aid, if necessary, but for any help in time of trouble and distress.

The new edition of "Under the Red Cross Flag" is to be welcomed.

GHOSTS OLD AND NEW

A GHOST story, to be effective, to come up to the essential requirement of this kind of fiction, must be capable of exciting in the reader the feeling of horror—and the greater, the more haunting, the feeling of horror excited, the more perfect the ghost story. But ghost stories, it appears, that enjoyed, when they were first written, a fine reputation for horror are apt to lose this quality with the course of time. Judging by the stories that they read and shivered over a century or so ago, our ancestors were much more easily moved by fear of the supernatural than their descendants of this generation. We doubt very much, for instance, whether any one today would be seriously moved, horrified, by SCOTT'S "Tapestried Chamber," the "bloodcurdling" romances of Mrs. RADCLIFFE or CHARLES BROCKDEN BROWN, or the two or three stories dealing with the supernatural attempted by DICKENS. The fact is, popular taste in ghosts—or, to put it more broadly, in tales of horror—has changed. Twentieth-century flesh does not creep at nineteenth-century gruesomeness, an insensitiveness of contemporary nerves that seems abundantly proved by a perusal of an excellent ghost anthology that has just been published by Dodd, Mead & Co. under the title "Great Ghost Stories" and reviewed elsewhere in this number of THE BOOK REVIEW. The interesting point is that the stories comprised in this anthology—and they are admirably chosen, from considerations of historical and literary interest—no longer terrify. And the reason seems to be that their supernaturalism is too crude, too antiquated to appeal to our present-day sophistication in such matters. The old-time ghosts, it seems, no longer make us shudder.

BUT we have not lost the power of shuddering—and we still have tales of horror capable of awakening this power. Only, the twentieth-century ghost story is a much more complex, subtle affair than its early Victorian prototype. This is not to say that the element of horror has completely disappeared from all ghost stories written more than thirty or forty years ago. EDGAR ALLAN POE is still a master in this art as he was in his own day—although his stories of horror are not quite so horrible as they once were. But they still appeal to us because their method is similar to the method employed in the best of the current tales of horror. They assume an air of realism, and are vigorously logical—or at least they appear to be so. An effective ghost story needs more than the conventional white-sheeted horror to hold our interest. This realism and apparent logic are vital factors, for instance, in Mrs. ATHERTON'S admirable collection of gruesome stories, "The Bell in the Fog." There are few tales of horror, indeed, more effective than "The Dead and the Countess" and "The Striding Place," appearing in that collection, which was first published thirteen years ago. There is unabated horror, also, and of a kind that seems to carry the promise of a respectable longevity in fame, in BRAM STOKER'S "Dracula." But the typical, completely developed twentieth-century ghost story is undoubtedly found in Mr. BLACKWOOD'S work. Such a tale as his "The Man Whom the Trees Loved" is an unforgetable thing, a blending of beauty and subtle horror rare in fiction. And its vitality, impressiveness, is mainly due to the feeling aroused in the reader that, in spite of its fantastic character, there may be truth in the tale after all. In his handling of the were-wolf theme, also, Mr. BLACKWOOD succeeds in conveying this impression of possibility, if not of probability. He writes, indeed, out of a profound knowledge of mysticism and occultism—and whatever one may think of these cults as systems of philosophic belief, he at least proves that they furnish an admirable equipment for the writer of ghost stories, an equipment that makes the old-time ghost story unconvincing and tenuous indeed.

TO conceive and carry out successfully a literary hoax, and to listen for two years to "appreciative comment" from one critic after another, all of them impressed with your effusion written "with tongue in cheek," must make up, altogether, a very pleasing sort of experience. It is the sort of experience possible only for one gifted with cleverness, imagination, and audacity, and as the particular hoax that we have in mind has been preeminently successful, the man who perpetrated it, Mr. WITTER BYNNER, must be congratulated on the possession of these qualities. And here is the way Mr. BYNNER played his hoax. On Nov. 25, 1916, there was published, by MITCHELL KENNERLEY, a book called "Spectra: New Poems." The authors of the book were given as "Annie Knish" and "Emmanuel Morgan." The poems certainly were "new," they launched, indeed, a "new school" of verse that was calculated to put Cubists, Futurists, Imagists, Vorticists quite to shame. And in this the new school of the "Spectrists" enjoyed an almost immediate success. Their book, "Spectra: New Poems," was not reviewed in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW, but elsewhere it was enthusiastically greeted. Its new theory of verse was respectfully received as a noteworthy contribution to twentieth century metrical development. The philosophy of "Spectrism" was explained in the preface where we were told that "the theme of a poem is to be regarded as a prism upon which the colorless white light of infinite existence falls and is broken into glowing, beautiful, and intelligible hues," that a poem is, as it were, an after-image of "the poet's initial vision," that the "overtones, adumbrations, or spectres, which for the poet haunt all objects both of the seen and the unseen world • • • should touch with a tremulous vibrancy of ultimate fact the reader's sense of the immediate theme." That is deliciously learned, of course, and one feels that it really must mean something. And now—to the great relief of everybody, it must be—the whole thing turns out to be a hoax. "Spectrism," is merely an innocent dig at Futurism, Cubism, and the rest. "Emmanuel Morgan" is not "Emmanuel Morgan" but Mr. WITTER BYNNER, and "Annie Knish" is none other than Mr. ARTHUR DAVISON FICKE. Both men are well known for verse that is as far from the Cubist or Spectric variety as possible.

IN a Pittsburgh paper (Pittsburgh was chosen as the seat of "Spectrism") Mr. BYNNER tells why and how he launched the Spectric muse:

> Imagists and Vorticists long had aroused my ire, and one day in Chicago I determined to form an ultra-modern school of poetry myself just to show how easily it might be done. I was attending a performance of the Russian Ballet in Chicago at the moment when the idea struck me. What should I call my new school? I looked down at my program and found it opened at "Le Spectre de la Rose." The word spectre struck me. Spectrists—that was a good, suggestive name. I adopted it forthwith.
> From Chicago I went to visit my friend FICKE, and on the train I formulated the principles upon which the new school was to be founded. FICKE received the idea with joy, and we went into "Spectric" session. For three weeks we did nothing but write "Spectric" poems and read them to each other, until FICKE'S wife threatened to divorce him if he read her another.
> We even created the careers of "Emmanuel Morgan" and "Annie Knish." "Mr. Morgan" was supposed to be an American painter who had studied in Paris but had not succeeded. While in Paris he fell under the influence of REMY DE GOURMONT, and turning from painting began writing poetry. We made "Miss Knish" a Hungarian woman who had written articles for European journals and had published a volume of poems in Russian under a Latin title.
> To add a little atmosphere to the two personalities, we decided to let it be known quietly that both were living in Pittsburgh.

Mr. BYNNER'S account of the immediate success of Spectrism is a delightful addition to the story. More than once he was forced to review the work of "Emmanuel Morgan," and he found it anything but easy to keep up the two poetic personalities belonging to him. And now, he assures us, as a consequence of what he has done—> the climax of the joke is the joke on me. In spite of the exposé, "Emmanuel Morgan" will not stop writing. His work is absolutely distinctive from mine, has nothing to do with my ideas of poetry. But he makes me keep on. He has tried out a number of "spectrics" since I have been in Pittsburgh. It's the joker joked.

ITALY'S ANNIVERSARY AND "THE DIVINE COMEDY"

By WALTER LITTLEFIELD

THE DIVINE COMEDY OF DANTE ALIGHIERI. The Italian text with a translation in English blank verse and a commentary. By Courtney Langdon. Volume I. Inferno. Harvard University Press. $2.50 net.

SIXTEEN days before Italy entered the war against Austria-Hungary three years ago it was my privilege to review for these columns the excellent English translation of Dante's "Commedia" made by Henry Johnson. And now the anniversary, emphasized by the Pact of Rome of April 9, and an enthusiastic desire on the part of the American public to make memorable the 24th of May, has brought forth the first volume of another translation.

One of the most interesting literary expressions of the age is the continued vogue, if not popularity, of the poet Dante. An attempt to account for the phenomenon would leave us still unsatisfied; yet, it is a subject which persistently haunts lovers of Dante. Dante and his two best-known books seem to become more unfathomable with each successive generation of commentators. At the same time his theology and philosophy more and more are coming to be recognized as universal and modern. Another element of sustained attraction is his love story, whether regarded as platonic, sentimental, or merely a romantic or philosophical creation. Possibly one element of interest is due to the fact that alone, among great poets, Dante writes about himself—others have sought their most exalted themes among deeds and lives already famous. Moreover, his Tuscan opens a pleasant and rapid path to a knowledge of modern Italian. Then there is the visual aspect—the fascination of that face "painted on loneliness"—from Giotto to Gustave Doré—and the haunting appeal made by each successive reproduction of the Naples bust. Finally, we have Dante in the movies.

The material phases of Mr. Langdon's work are worth mentioning. He presents his translation on pages facing the original text, and the whole is introduced by a running comment, chiefly historical and biographical, and rarely philological. This triune combination will certainly appeal to the beginner in Dante as well as to the beginner in Italian.

Let us take up the comment first. Its chief characteristics appear to be a conciseness of expression and the display of a comprehensive knowledge of what the best commentators have had to say on given points. The lack of argument, explanation, and excuse in arriving at conclusion or ultimate selection seems to me to be justified by a combination of sound scholarship and common sense. Can Grande is tentatively identified as the Veltro, and Beatrice, whatever her symbolical significance, is, without question, identified as the Florentine girl, Beatrice Portinari. This is gratifying when it is remembered that Paget Toynbee and Edward Moore, to mention only two of the more prominent, have discussed these themes through hundreds of pages.

This said, however, we begin to part company with Mr. Langdon, first in regard to the Italian text employed, which is that of the Vandelli edition of 1914. A sounder one is that of Witte as revised by Toynbee. In seeking to remedy the mistakes of the early copyists, whose blunders found their way into the first printed editions, the tendencies of modern etymologists have been to make corrections in favor of modern Italian rather than to leave in the Tuscan what they did not understand, particularly where the scribe's error was not self-evident. This has led to some curious turns, particularly in punctuation; for, although in either English or modern Italian one may modify a relative pronoun by an adjective phrase, Dante absolutely never did so. Then, too, the dialect of the Florentine streets, in which Dante wrote, was prone to drop the final vowels of words, if not absolutely essential to the meaning, so that a better euphony might be attained. These omissions are supplied with a needless particularity in the case of the Vandelli edition, to such an extent as even to destroy the harmony, if not the meter—as, for example, where "tanto" is substituted in the line, "Tant' era pien di sonno in su quel punto."

Now, as to Mr. Langdon's translation. Some of his ideas in regard to the transference of thought from one language to another are sound; others can be proved not to be so. He writes in his preface:

> The transference of a poem from one tongue to another is capable of success in direct proportion to the degree in which the human and spiritual element in the original predominates over the artistry, however excellent, of the verse-form in which that element is embodied.

This is very good. But in the transference, if we employ prose as the vehicle, much of the meaning which is frequently embodied in cadence, to say nothing of the beauties of harmony, will be quite lost. Again, if the meter of the original be employed, the unfamiliarity of form, to say nothing of the obstacles of rhyme, is certain to disconcert both mind and ear. Charles Eliot Norton was content to translate the "Commedia" into prose. Byron began a brave effort in terza rima, which Dean Plumtre turned into a dismal failure eighty years later. Now, blank verse is just as indigenous to English letters as the terza rima is to Italian, as the Alexandrine is to French. Lacking rhyme, it is less confining for the translator than is the couplet.

The selection of blank verse, therefore, by Mr. Langdon may be amply defended. Now, as to his words. Like Norton, he has full faith in those of Anglo-Saxon rather than of Latin origin. He criticises Longfellow for having been led "to draw too much upon the tempting Latin element, which looks like Italian, and too little upon the stronger, homely Anglo-Saxon element." One might as well make the same accusation against Shakespeare, who took what words suited him wherever he found them, whether among cockneys or rustics, in various kinds of Latin, or in Norman French. One might just as well say that the "Song of the Old Sailor" would be an adequate substitute for the "Rime of the Ancient Mariner."

And this faith in Anglo-Saxon and his patient effort to confine himself to it have evidently blunted our translator's appreciation of the figures of speech, which are the life of poetry. His verses are literal; they leave nothing to the imagination. Take, for example, these six lines from the First Canto and compare them with Johnson's:

> And even as he who, from the deep emerged > with sorely troubled breath upon the shore, > turns round, and gazes at the dangerous water;
> even so my mind, which still was fleeing on,
> turned back to look again upon the pass > which ne'er permitted any one to live.
> * * * * * * *
> And like the swimmer, who with labored breath
> Has come forth from the deep, and on the shore
> Turns round, and gazes at the perilous sea,
> So did my spirit, which was still in flight,
> Turn back to look again upon the pass,
> Which no one yet had ever left alive.

Besides, the closing line in the Langdon example is certainly not the poet's meaning: "Che non lasciò giammai persona viva." Again, when Dante, retreating from the three beasts, first encounters Virgil, it is as "the sight of one," "who seemed, through long continued silence, weak."

The last word is ".fioco." But what does the translator mean? Does he refer to Virgil's appearance or to his voice? Silence does not necessarily produce the appearance of weakness, and Virgil has not yet shown whether his voice was weak or strong. Some translators overlooking the latter circumstance construe "fioco," "hoarse." In either case, weak or hoarse, there is an apparent reference to the neglect of the Roman classic or the Latin tongue by Dante's contemporaries.

On the other hand, many instances might be quoted of a happy interpretation on the part of the translator, or, at least, a happy selection from among former interpretations. Such an interpretation is concerning the effect on Dante of the words over the gate of Hell. "Il senso lor m'è duro," he says to Virgil, which is rendered, "their meaning troubles me." This is correct, for although "duro" usually means "hard," here it obviously means "disquieting." Virgil proceeds not to explain, but to reassure.

Mr. Langdon writes that his translation is the result of over twenty years' work with large classes "in Dante in English" at Brown University. This probably accounts for the excellence of his comment. He has now made the way easy for these classes to reach Dante in Italian. Whether he has achieved what he actually aimed at, to make his translation "in every possible way an improvement on its rivals old and new," is another question. He hardly seems to have done so.

'YOU NO LONGER COUNT

By Rene Boylesve

Translated from the French by Louise S. Houghton

"Tu n'es plus rien"—self not so much sacrificed as splendidly extinguished by the tragedy of war, is the theme of this novel, which burst into celebrity in Paris on the instant of publication.

Odette, who is very much in love with her officer husband, loses him in an early battle. Determined to dedicate her life to his dear memory, she shuts herself off from the world, but she cannot escape the war and its effects.

The story of her transformation is of the most intense interest, the greatest exaltation. It gives a different conception, and a more intense realization of the war than has hitherto been conveyed.

A FRIEND'S TRIBUTE TO RIPLEY HITCHCOCK

The New York Times Review of Books:

ADMIRABLE tributes have been paid to the literary and public activities of the late Ripley Hitchcock, but his life was so full in those respects that there was little space for referring to his unusual traits of character. In 1879, when he put foot on the first rung of the ladder in the "Tall Tower" of The New York Tribune, I had preceded him by four years, and had a first-hand view of his breaking to harness. He had come with the annual band of aspirants from the college commencements, the ablest of whom were of one mind as to "Journalism." The editor of the paper, Whitelaw Reid, in a salient magazine article, and in public addresses, had made out a strong case for journalism as a paramount "profession"; but few of those collegians were yielding to his blandishments. They were condescending to adopt journalism as a momentary convenience, but had no intention of allowing journalism to adopt them. First, it should provide a handy support while they were sharpening the tools of genius and then serve as a springboard for a vault into "Literature."

Ripley Hitchcock

Hitchcock was one of the few who made the leap without spraining the neck of his ambition. His method of approach was not what was expected of a Harvard man presumably armed with all the superiorities imputed to the training of that university. As a rule, the college recruit was impatient of restraint, and aimed at immediate recognition through a tour de force. As a consequence a vast amount of blue pencil was consumed in breaking him in. But it was not so with Ripley Hitchcock. Though his quiet manner was charged with confidence, he was not above seeking counsel of those who were familiar with the work, and he knew instinctively how to draw instructions from the sub-editors, as to length and treatment, without appearing helpless or being troublesome. He was tireless in making sure of his facts, and attentive to relative values and terse statement; so that he at once achieved the knack of producing good "copy," which is the first requisite in a newspaper office for advancement.

That came to him with unusual promptness, for he was favored both by his effective style and by a sensational incident. His first personal taste in subjects ran to art and the artistic nature. Either he had quickly outgrown or had escaped altogether the usual subjection of young students to the external appeal of pictures, and already apprehended that it was spiritual significance which set artistic values. So it was an agreeable step forward when he was asked to assist Clarence Cook, who had long been in charge of the art columns of the paper, and was as charming personally as he was brilliant and authoritative as a critic.

The two men got on famously, the younger, of course, having mostly to do with the news side of art. Though he was the gentlest of gentlemen, Cook's pen could be racily sharp, and he was pleasurably at home in controversy. An art dispute of high opportunity was brewing over General di Cesnola and the "collection" he had dug, or assembled, while United States Consul in Cyprus. Its purchase by the Metropolitan Museum brought it within the range of public criticism, and Cook led an assault which shortly involved society, and even disturbed the borders of religion. The Tribune had always been the exponent of free criticism, but this fight had unpleasant features, and grew to be inconvenient to the editor, who concluded, finally, that as there was not an ounce of beauty in the whole archaic assortment, it was useless to wreck the peace of the town on such technical questions as whether, in assembling the statues, each head had been cemented to the right torso. On that decision Cook resigned as art editor and Hitchcock was advanced to fill the vacancy.

An immediate task requested of him was a two-column article on the Cesnola collection. As may easily be seen, the assignment had its embarrassments, which he met in a way characteristic of his high sense of fairness and loyalty. Instead of beating about the bush, he went direct to Clarence Cook and sought his counsel, which was given in the friendliest spirit. Then he addressed himself to the maze of facts, motives, and bruised feelings pertaining to the Cesnola side of the case, and out of all the information produced an article which softened controversy and gave due value to the historic meaning to art of the rude relics that far antedated the glories of Greece.

As a man with a full quiver of opinions, and a ready vein of expression, he was singularly free of the captious spirit. Nearly forty years of intercourse gives me no recollection of hearing from him a wounding criticism or a cynical personal reflection. In a judicial way he could be generous with praise; and though inclined to be reticent over faults, he never withheld an adverse view when challenged. In matters of opinion he appeared to be guided by a conviction that things calling for much censure were not worth while. In a recent letter he remarked, apropos of the distractions of modern life, that, nevertheless, "there is always time for the important things."

After ten years of journalism he began his real life work as literary adviser with the old and highly respected house of Appleton. No other position in a great publishing business is so interesting as that of the literary guide and spiritual artificer, or calls for so much moral devotion and thankless drudgery. Most authors think they are grateful for the things they, themselves, have overlooked, and for the grooming so patiently bestowed; but as a matter of fact their thoughts oftener revert ruefully to the prunings that have been cast into the fire. One reason why an author's first book is frequently so much better than the last is that at first he accepts any and all advice in his eagerness to get a footing; but as he gains reputation he grows more lenient to his faults, and ends by echoing Touchstone's complacency: "A poor thing, but mine own."

Hitchcock's extraordinary success with "David Harum" occurred in the eighth year of his work at the Appletons. Westcott's manuscript had been declined by eight publishers, of course on the advice of their literary steersmen, who did not happen to see a gem in the rough diamond, or who, possibly, shrank from the task of so much revision; also, it may have been thought by the business manager that the improved book could not possibly repay the necessary labor and expense. But Hitchcock had the vision to realize its worth. A simple transfer of the famous horse-trading incident to the opening chapter of the novel would impart a humorous tone to the whole story if the manuscript were revised. Besides other revisions he lifted out many consecutive chapters in the middle of the book on that line. The author was ill and had the misfortune to expire six months before the book was issued. It sprang instantly into favor, 400,000 copies being sold within a year. The total sales have reached over a million copies, placing the book next to "Uncle Tom's Cabin" among the best sellers. After the novel had won great vogue the editor and his wife arranged the story in the form of a play which was popular for a long season, and recently the book has been made into motion pictures.

A close second to this "best seller" was Stephen Crane's "The Red Badge of Courage," and many were the authors he helped to recognition and fame. He modestly never cared to refer to the "David Harum" success.

For the last sixteen years of his life he was the adviser and also a director of Harper & Brothers. In that crucial duty he was alert, judicial, and unsparing of time and strength. During about thirty-five years of editorial work he found time to write twenty-two books of distinct value to art and to American history. Among his last works at Harpers in a "Documentary Edition" of "A History of the American People," by Woodrow Wilson. He was continually writing on current topics, and giving help to public interests, his clubs, and such influential bodies as the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the American Social Science Association, in both of which he was Vice President.

Though always open-minded and lively in his social hours, he was reticent as to his personal life. Only his very intimates knew of the depth of his family devotion and of the warmth of his heart. In the rearing of his boys he tried to be the favored companion as well as the devoted father, and only those parents who have essayed the rôle can know how difficult it is to hold to the mood and purpose that win parental success. It was his great joy to see his sons rally to the colors, the elder going to France to fly for Liberty, and the younger in the officers' training camp. A notable quality of his later years was a mellowing toward the question of religious beliefs. Naturally liberal, and responsive to the spiritual appeal, he came to look on dogma as of small consequence compared to living in the spirit. When he was followed to his rest the chapel was crowded beyond the doors with appreciative friends, and the flowers and the music and the wonderful words of the epistle inspired that hope which is the triumph of Christian faith.

WHO'S WHO IN MUSIC

WHO'S WHO IN MUSIC. Edited by Cesar Searchinger. A contemporary biographical dictionary, both American and foreign, with international musical gazeteer and incidental record of worldwide activities of living musicians. New York: Current Literature Publishing Company.

WITHIN 840 compact pages, the first issue of a special "Who's Who" for the musical profession presents nearly 6,000 short biographies after the manner of convenient books of its kind. A geographical index shows that 60 per cent. of those listed are American. The comparison for particular localities gives roughly, as representing Boston, 300 names, and Chicago 400, as against Paris 225 and Berlin 450. There are 500 for London and an even 1,000 for New York. In round numbers the great cities contain half the world's musicians, as Mr. Searchinger surveys them.

In his efforts to make a first edition at once comprehensive and authentic the editor admits he has been confronted by many difficulties. First and foremost, the war has almost entirely precluded direct communication with those of his "subjects" residing in Continental Europe. For these he has drawn on the recent eighth edition of Riemann, the latest British and American issues of Grove, some volumes of "The Art of Music," edited by himself; the French "Annuare des Artistes" and "Qui Est-Il?" Italian "Chi E," German "Wer Ist's," and Hess's "Musiker-Kalender," London "Musical Directory," English "Who's Who" and "Who's Who in Music."

It must, as he remarks, be borne in mind that little has been published on music in Europe since the war, and that therefore the changes wrought by the great conflict have hardly been taken into account, especially as regards Germany, France, Italy, and Russia. The addresses given are in every case the latest known. It is not unlikely that many persons have now left their former domiciles, as have Paderewski and Ysaye, and some have given their lives in defense of their various countries. Such deaths as have been recorded in the press of the allied countries have been duly noted, among them Safonoff, Cesar Cui, Count d'Harcouft, and Debussy.

The great number of foreign artists at present in the United States has to some extent compensated for the difficulty of transatlantic communication. This difficulty accounts for the preponderance of American subjects in the present edition. It is the profound hope of the editor that international amity may have been reestablished before the next biennial edition is prepared, so that this temporary lack of proportion may be righted by the compiling of material in the various countries themselves. He adds a fervent wish that this work may do its small share in reestablishing mutual esteem and good will among the nations, a task in which the artists of the world are privileged to be the pioneers.

For the rest, it may be seen at a glance that the volume is not on the order of press agents' puffs. It plays no favorites, accepts no stars. Caruso gets the same space in the text as a New York organist, W. C. Carl, while Geraldine Farrar and Galli-Curci have half as many lines, respectively, as are allotted in adjacent type to Arthur Farwell and Walter C. Gale. In the sixty pages devoted to a musical gazetteer there are added lists of music schools, conservatories, opera houses, and orchestras of the world, choral societies, professional associations, concert managers, and music publishers of the United States. A few blank leaves provide for suggestions of new names for a future edition.

son " whose name was on his lips when he died? There wasn't much of anything for the police to work on, so Waring decides to try to find out the truth for himself. His investigations presently bring him into contact with an organization called " The Readjustment Society of the World " whose objects are, to say the least of them, not exactly modest, being nothing less than an entire change in the financial system and a redistribution of wealth. Of course a number of other people are sooner or later involved in the course of the story, among them Burton Conybear, " the richest man in New York," a charming, quick-witted, and courageous young woman, a youthful society matron with brains and a taste for matchmaking, the Police Commissioner, Herkomer, some millionaires, and several gunmen.

Mr. Roche tells his story well. He has the gift of making a tale seem plausible while he is narrating it, and a feeling for character which renders his people more interesting than the conventional puppets usually found in this particular kind of fiction. Conybear is a likable person who takes his medicine gamely, and the reader sympathizes with the perplexities of the Police Commissioner who wasn't a detective genius, but as he himself ruefully admitted " only a policeman," and entirely agrees with him in his opinion of Mrs. Willy Sinsabaugh, who certainly was " a dear." Kidnapping, theft, murder, and a Wall Street panic are some of the incidents in a plot which it would be manifestly unfair to delineate more closely. In short, " Ransom! " is an entertaining yarn.

IMPRISONED FREEMAN

THE IMPRISONED FREEMAN. By Helen S. Woodruff. George Sully & Co. $1.35 net.

At the present time when the word " atrocity " seems incomplete without the prefix " German," it is well to be reminded that in our own land and under the aegis of our laws atrocities are perpetrated which cry to Heaven. In " The Imprisoned Freeman " Mrs. Woodruff does not hesitate to reveal the injustice and the torture often inflicted here and now, under the institutions of which we are so proud. She tells a dramatic and a tragic story, dedicating it to three friends whose work aided her in the presentation she has given, among them Honorable Thomas Mott Osborne, " the ' man with a vision,' who inspired it." In spite of the subject of the novel it has its optimistic side. One cannot say that it ends in sunshine, but at least it holds a rainbow of hope. The plot is interesting, the story is told with graphic power, the characters are very human and the thesis is set forth with equal sincerity and courage.

BEAR CAT

WHEN " BEAR CAT " WENT DRY. By Charles Neville Buck. Illustrated. W. J. Watt & Co. $1.40 net.

As its name indicates, " When ' Bear Cat ' Went Dry " is a temperance novel. Its hero, Turner Stacy, familiarly known as " Bear Cat," having become convinced that the manufacture of illicit whisky is a most nefarious occupation, proceeds to do away with it by the simple if somewhat drastic method of smashing every hidden still he can find. This Carrie Nation-like behavior wins for him a number of friends and of enemies; he is obliged to do quite a good bit of fighting, and has more than one narrow escape from a violent and untimely death. But, of course, he triumphs over all his enemies and becomes the uncrowned king of the mountains, whereupon the heroine, Blossom Fulkerson, discovers that she really loved him all the time, and the book concludes with a promise of much-needed schools as well as a railroad.

JOHNNY PRYDE

JOHNNY PRYDE. By J. J. Bell. With frontispiece. Fleming H. Revell Company. $1 net.

In his new volume Mr. Bell returns to Scotland, giving us a rather amusing series of sketches of life in a little place called Kirkside, as seen by the grocer's boy. The time is the present, and the war has made things difficult for the patriotic Mr. Clark, the owner of the grocery. Shop assistants, for instance, are almost as difficult to find as maid servants, and the gossip in Kirkside declares that the ladies are in the habit of stealing out after dark with masks on their faces, trying to kidnap each other's servants. One of the book's most prominent characters is Jessie, a " house table-general," who holds the record in the way of changing places.

Johnny Pryde is his own spokesman. He is an energetic young person, and the account of how he saved the lives of a number of kittens, and by so doing provided " a treat " for the wounded soldiers, is quite entertaining. For Johnny was no shirker, and he wanted to do what he could, even though the opportunities open to a 16-year-old grocer's boy were not many. Also, he wrote what he called " potery," and managed to get a good deal of fun out of life, despite his somewhat dour aunt, who, however, finally proved to be a much better friend of his than he had imagined.

After the death of her husband, Mrs. Amelia Darcy was the sole proprietor of the most successful jewelry shop in the flourishing city of Colchester. Needing an expert to do certain special work in the way of setting precious stones and designing ornaments, she sent for her cousin, James Darcy, an artist in his line, to come to Colchester and act as her assistant. He also boarded with her in the comfortable apartment over the shop, and it was when he came downstairs early one morning, intending to make certain promised repairs on a very curious and valuable watch, that he found her lying on the floor, dead, with a terrible wound in her head and in her hand the very watch he had been about to work on. And the watch was still ticking loudly, though every other timepiece in the place had stopped.

Darcy, who had quarreled with her more than once, was arrested and charged with the murder of his cousin. But the girl to whom he was engaged, Amy Mason, firmly believed in his innocence, and her father shared her opinion. These two were resolved to do all they could for Jimmie, but despite their faith and generosity it might have gone hard with him had it not been for the opportune arrival of Colonel Ashley, a famous private detective. As the days went on, all sorts of new incidents developed and the case became more and more complicated, but at last the Colonel succeeded in untangling all the threads and discovering the truth.

THE FACE OF THE KING

THE FACE OF THE KING. By James Roberts. Robert J. Shorse. $1.25.

The Balkan States, far from being a blessing to the real world, are a boon to writers of fiction. Without jarring one's credulity too much, an imaginary kingdom may always be tucked away among their rather hazy boundaries. In Mr. Roberts's story the King of Molbania, influenced by his bethrothed to oppose a treaty with Austria which would mean the invasion of Serbia, is spirited away by conspirators, who bribe an English actor to impersonate him, and to ratify the treaty. At the crucial moment, however, the face of the real King appears, and the plot comes to naught. The slight but vivacious tale is " a mystery story " to the actors only, the reader being always behind the scenes. A charming Princess and a pretty American girl fill important rôles.

ON TWO FRONTIERS

ON TWO FRONTIERS. By George T. Buffum. Frontispiece by Maynard Dixon. Pen-and-ink illustration by Frank T. Merrill. Boston: Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company. $1.35.

There is a quaint charm about these stories by Mr. Buffum. They remind one of the tales told by wandering troubadours in olden times, often without plot—fragments revealing an illuminating portion of life. Half the book deals with the frontier of South Africa, the other half with our own West of fifty years ago.

" The Low-Burned Candle " tells how the carelessness of a maid separates two lovers, and how the Boer war brought about a reconciliation. " Kaluwo's Uncut Diamond " is a story of the diamond mines. " The Coveted Lobola " relates a native love story of the veldt. " On the Kalahari " pictures the white man's fight with the desert, and " Khaml," the last of the African tales, is a sketch of the white missionary's influence over a black man.

The Western part of the book is more commonplace. It is the " Wild and Woolly West " at its wildest and woolliest, and is likely to bring back recollections of that play of sainted memory, " Ten Nights in a Barroom." The characters Mr. Buffum draws here are less interesting than those of the more distant land, and our author's quaint charm is not so apparent.

Japan—where men in breechcloths are pounding rice with long wooden poles in one house, while next door operatives are busy making garments on American sewing machines. Where a delirium of work seems to pervade everyone. Where human muscle, instead of machinery, still does most of the labor. Sixty per cent. of the people are engaged in agricultural pursuits. There are 890,000 manufacturers of tea. Japanese rice is the best in the world. The educational system is excellent. The University at Mita has an enrollment of 4,510.

What Is Germany's Invisible Army?

IF the Allies had an invisible army in Germany and in all neutral countries—if that army could return with exact information and scientific calculations, the Allies would long ago have won the war. Germany maintains such an army—and yet she has not won the war. Why not? What is her invisible army?

The Winning of the War

By Roland G. Usher

Written by a Professor of History at Washington University, it tells the reader clearly what has been done so far, and what remains for us to do. It analyzes the objectives of the Germans and of the Allies—it tells why victory has been postponed—how long the war is likely to last—and why the Central Powers "will end the war with the disgrace of the strategy of defeat compared to which the original sin against Belgium, the sinking of the Lusitania, and unrestricted submarine warfare seem like acts of mild neutrality.

It is a great book—a vital book not only for the moment but for all time—a book you simply cannot afford to miss.

occasional lines from the work of those men called poets. This is only a striking way of hinting that true poetry is as indefinable and indescribable as the vibration of an overtone. But there is no truer test than this magic evocation of the presence of a genuine gift. The author of "November" is of the chosen. He "suggests" poetry. That is to say, he awakens the sleeping sense of beauty. He is impassioned, lyrical, and without attitudinizing does he reach and sustain high moods.

Mr. Binns has that glowing sense of the unity of all nature which, since Lucretius, has been the core and inspiration for so many poets. To him the universe is impelled by a broad, silent-moving force like the swell of a deep, gigantic wave. His pantheism shines out in poem after poem from the organ-toned invocation of

> Draw into thine own being the circumambient power,
> Till wholly invigorated by its own divinity,
> Thou art become enthusiast in every cell,
> Poet throughout thy soul; breathing the fine,
> The starry breath of that spirit, transcendent
> Whose body thou may'st be, hast thou faith for it—to those lines of imaginative beauty in "Freedom's Fellowship" where the poet speaking as though he were a root in the ground, describes the emerging from the dark ground:

> I lifted up my heart; I was lift up
> So upon gladness that I could not stop
> Uttering twiggy praises full of leaf
> Into that wondrous light as though all grief
> Of my long labor in the dark were over
> And I had now no more to do but hover
> Upon the air, crooning my happiness
> Fond as a pigeon.

This almost Franciscan closeness with nature, this intense intimacy with wind and twig and hill finds its most exquisite expression in a lovely lyric, "The Hill-Top Wood." The poet has climbed a great oak tree at the top of the hill; he stretches out on a great branch, feels himself one of the strong, friendly brotherhood of the trees:

> I never thought that I could
> Know in my flesh the thing
> That only the great oaks can
> When the leaves are down and they fling
> Their arms out wide—but a man
> Is at home in that great oak wood
> Up on the top of the hill.
> You great hearts!—you that have stood
> On this hill-top littering,
> As only the great oaks can,
> Your wonder—today I bring
> Another fragment of Man
> To be of your brotherhood
> Up on the top of the hill.

In the line "today I bring another fragment of man" is expressed the essence of Henry Bryan Binns. He has a feeling not so much of kinship with nature as of oneship with it.

Mr. Binns has a good deal to say about the war. He evidently knows a good deal about Germany and has respect for her achievements before the war. But to save her from herself he wants to root out the blood-lust that is devouring her.

AN ARAB BOSWELL

A BOSWELL OF BAGHDAD. By E. V. Lucas. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.35.

WHEN Keats, in an oft-quoted verse, wrote that "the poetry of earth is ceasing never," he might have added its wit and satire and worldly wisdom as well. For the ancients are modern in these respects and we moderns ancient. There are quips and jests which, thought to be original, can be traced to Athens or to India and beyond. Life and thought are tenacious and receptive, and if modern fashions will not disdain old-time models why should we not in these serious days turn to ancient and mediæval sages for our parables? Emerson was not averse to Saadi, and Solomon continues an authority on life's wisdom.

It was a happy thought which led the versatile Mr. Lucas to dip into de Slane's translation (1842-71) of Ibn Khallikan's comprehensive, if garrulous, Biographical Dictionary, and give ninety-nine pages of selections and adaptations. He could have readily added to its length. It is not the only old work which merits such resurrection. Whether due to the desert atmosphere, with its broad expanse, or to constant wandering from place to place and Prince to Prince in the search for patronage, the Arab writer developed a world philosophy and a versatility almost marvelous. His language, with its subtleties of sound and expression, its wealth of epithets and intellectual range, made him everywhere at home; and he was as ready to improvise in a poet's contest as to draw his sword in combat with the heretic. The periods of literature, Nomad, pre-Islamic, the Koran, and subsequent dynasties furnished ample material for collecter and chronicler. But Ibn Khallikan was less a Boswell than an Isaac Disraeli in gathering curiosities of literary biography.

Quotable throughout are the stories, grouped under various headings, sayings, and apothegms which have not lost their pith and point. One of the cleverest is told of a sage who, after discoursing in presence of his slave girl, asked her opinion of his effort. The repetitions, she replied, were a blemish. "I repeat," he rejoined, "to make those understand who do not." "Yes," she answered, "and to make those understand who do not, you weary those who do."

THE FLYING POILU

THE FLYING POILU: A STORY OF AERIAL WARFARE. By Marcel Nadaud, Observer-Bombardier in the French Aviation Corps. Translated by Frances Wilson Huard. With drawings by Charles Huard. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.35.

CHIGNOLE was a child of the Paris streets, as merry and valiant a young gamin as ever hid the finest of qualities and the sturdiest of ambitions under an exterior merely gay. He had had, as a little boy, a passion for mechanics; when his father's death sent him at an early age to work it was first with bicycles and then with motor cars; with the outbreak of war he was easily able to make himself invaluable as a mechanician, for he added marvelous instinct to sure knowledge and unfailing faithfulness. But that was not enough for Chignole; he wanted to fly. That was his dream, and it came true.

That is the bare outline of the first part of the story of "The Flying Poilu"; but the story itself, even in the really touching part where Chignole wins the Military Medal and is expelled from the Flying Corps for one and the same cause—a brilliant exploit that was contrary to the squad's discipline, offers the merest skeleton for the book. In reality, "The Flying Poilu" is a series of vivid pictures of French fliers, their loves, their work, their talk, their friends. It shows us, richly, something of the French. Chignole himself is a delight.

His motto is something which the translator presents to us as "I should worry." His ingenuity is as unconquerable as his bravery. His devotions are very strong, and he is not at all ashamed of them—his affection for his mother, of whom he constantly thinks, and to whom he writes long, gay, tender letters very frequently, and his loyalty to his pilot, who, although he is his "boss" and his social superior, is called by no more respectful title than "Old Charles." He is vain, and sweet, and level-headed, and funny, irrepressible, and thoroughly lovable. To "Old Charles," who tells the story, he is like a younger brother—yet a younger brother who has more than once saved his elder's life.

The incidents of the book are full of excitement, daring, ingenuity. Each chapter is a little tale—or rather a little picture—in itself. And the presentation of each event and character—whether the matter be funny, brave, sad, or whatever it is—is always vital and distinctive. Here is Chignole in the air, facing what seems like certain death and refusing to surrender:

> He must act, for he could no longer find vent for his feelings in words. He felt the necessity of a gesture which would baffle the adversary and disarm death: so, standing upright on his seat, he heroically spat upon the enemy.

"The Flying Poilu" is a fine little bit from France—and the illustrations are, of course, memorable.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

GEORGE H. DORAN & CO. have bought The Bookman from Dodd, Mead & Co., and with the number for next September it will appear under their imprint and editorship, with a new format and a different policy. The numbers for June, July, and August will appear under the Dodd, Mead & Co. imprint and will contain only material which they have already contracted for or have on hand. With the September issue it will become a Doran magazine.

Mr. G. G. Wyant, who has been for the last two years editor of The Bookman, has accepted a position with the Yale University Press. He will resign this week from his present editorial chair and early in June will take up his new work as Secretary of the Yale University Press, spending part of his time at the New Haven office and part at the New York office of the Press.

Captain James Norman Hall, who was lately taken prisoner by the Germans after a shot had injured his airplane so that it came down within their lines, is the author of a book on his work as a fighting birdman, to be called "High Adventure," which the Houghton Mifflin Company will publish in June. His "Kitchener's Mob," which narrated his experiences while training and fighting with Kitchener's first army, will be remembered as among the most widely read of the early books about the war. Later he became an airman, flew and fought with the Lafayette Escadrille, and was wounded severely. On his recovery last Summer he was transferred to the American aviation force in France.

Edward Lucas White, whose "The Unwilling Vestal" lately went into its third edition six weeks after publication, has told an inquirer of the preparation he made to write his story about the Vestal Virgins of Imperial Rome. Already a trained classicist and a long-time teacher of Greek and Latin, he yet thought that he did not know enough about the subject of the Vestals, their life and ceremonial and their position in the Roman Empire, and so he read everything that had been written about them in Latin, German, French, Italian, and English since the revival of learning in Europe, hunted out, read, and copied all the passages in Greek and Latin literature referring to them, and from public collections of inscriptions copied every inscription that would throw light on his theme.

Robert Naylor Whiteford of the Faculty of Toledo University is the author of "Motives in English Fiction," which the Putnams have in train for early publication. It presents and discusses the leading threads of motive that wind through English fiction from Sir Thomas Malory to Charles Dickens.

Clarence Budington Kelland, author of the well-known "Mark Tidd" books for boys, and "The Source," has gone to France to take charge of the publicity work of the Y. M. C. A. With him went as assistant, Walter K. Towers, author of "Masters of Space."

Mrs. Velma Swanston Howard, to whom Americans are indebted for her translations of the novels of Selma Lagerlöf, has lately described her first meeting with the Swedish author, saying that Miss Lagerlöf has a very cordial manner, a sympathetic personality, and a rare sense of humor. She is of medium height, with a fine, fair face and has small, beautiful white hands and a splendid head superbly set on neck and shoulders.

A story for mothers inspired by war conditions is announced for immediate publication by Harpers. It is called "My Boy in Khaki," and is written by Della Thompson Lutes, editor of American Motherhood, who endeavors in the book to comfort and inspire the mothers whose hearts are torn between love of country and love of their sons.

The history of "Our First Year in the Great War," by General Francis Greene, is announced for early publication by the Putnams. It will contain chapters on how the problem of transportation has been met and solved, on "The Tactics of the Five Arms," and on the prospects of victory.

James B. Connolly's new book, "The U-boat Hunters," describing the activities of our navy and especially of our destroyers in the submarine zone, will be published late this Spring by the Scribners.

EDWARD LUCAS WHITE

will take you there in his new novel

THE UNWILLING VESTAL

Mr. White established, in his remarkable historical romance of South America, "El Supremo," his unusual ability to make the past live again in the very life and color of its daily habit.

"The Unwilling Vestal" is just such another miracle of re-creation, but a shorter, more condensed and more swiftly moving story. It takes you upon a veritable sight-seeing trip through the streets, the homes, the temples, the shows and circuses, the country estates of the Roman aristocracy, whom you meet as they really were, a human, slangy, sporty, capable, dollar-loving, likable lot, much like Americans themselves.

New York World: "He has brought his Romans and their lives right up to the pitch of the motion picture age."

New York Times: "A vivid picture of the time with which it deals."

Philadelphia Evening Telegraph: "A romance as modern and thrilling as any written of the New York or London of today."

The Outlook: "For once we have a story of classical days over which we do not go to sleep."

New York Sun: "Action? From the first word Mr. White hardly ever lets up. * * * The story has suspense to a notable degree, to a degree far beyond the power of many novelists to achieve."

The Huns Couldn't Hold This Chicago Boy

From 8,000 feet in the air he had swirled down into their camp, wounded, helpless. Their train was rushing him to their prison camp at 35 miles an hour. The German guard sat beside him with gun loaded and ready to shoot. And from this he escaped.

It was 72 days before he was safe—72 days of crawling and slipping by night and hiding by day—bleeding, wounded—passing sentries boldly—fighting peasants—winding up in that dramatic crossing of the barbed wire fence that Germany considers so sure a boundary line.

Get his book at your bookseller's. It is a great story of that indomitable spirit that makes America unconquerable, invincible.

Careful Inquiry Shows Real Progress in American Output, Including One Machine Which Is Unburnable

By JAMES ARTHUR SEAVEY.

A CONSIDERABLE amount of language, written and oral, has been fired at long range and short at the aircraft production situation in this country. Of late the fire has been so intense that what parts of speech had been held in reserve have been sent to the first-line trenches. But it has seemed to many quite plain but very good American citizens that much of the discussion has failed either to illuminate or improve a condition that was until recently about as bad as it well could be.

It is not of the slightest assistance to the task of licking Germany to establish the fact that Gutzon Borglum is the very best investigator among all the [illegible] in the United States, or that he did or did not try to become interested in an aircraft plant, or that some of Colonel Deeds's ancestors were born in Germany and spelled their name Dietz, or that the Colonel transferred to his wife or his business associate in Dayton, after he had become an officer in the United States Army, shares of stock in companies which, either because of or in spite of his influence with the Aircraft Production Board obtained contracts for aircraft, or even that some of the subsidiaries of a certain motor corporation were hard up for working capital until they got some of these fat contracts.

Let all the charges and innuendoes be admitted to be true, wholly or in part. How will it all add a single cubit to the stature of an airplane?

What the American Army in France and in Flanders wants is plenty of American flying machines and plenty of husky young Americans to fly them. And what the American people want to know is why that army overseas does not get what it wants. By this time every schoolboy in Germany knows that the American aircraft program has fallen down, and fallen hard. What the folk here at home, who are paying the war bills of the United States, and who will gladly continue to pay as long as the need exists, wish to know is what has been done to correct past blunders, what can be done to supply Pershing's troops with the airplanes they need and the men to fly them.

How many aircraft plants, ready for action, are there in this country, anyway? Where are they? What can they turn out? Are they working to their capacity? If not, why not? Can the present capacity be enlarged? Have the owners of the plants received sufficient orders from the Government, or serious assurances of such orders, to justify them in putting good American dollars into a 50 or 100 per cent. factory enlargement? If not, again why not?

It is the purpose of this article to answer some of these questions. In order to do so, a survey of the actualities and possibilities of American aircraft production has been made. It has been difficult, sometimes impossible, to obtain as full and accurate information as could be desired, because of the disinclination of those interested to speak their minds freely, lest sooner or later they find their names on an official black list, or because it was difficult to discuss war products without revealing what ought to be war secrets. And no loyal American and no decent American publication would, for a moment, do anything to delay the hamstringing of the Hun. But, for all that, information was obtained that may be of interest to many of our citizens and, perhaps, useful to the Government, behind which every true American will stand until Tennyson's vision has been realized and there has been established, to endure until the dawn of the eternal morning, "the brotherhood of man, the federation of the world."

But before going into details, and for the specific purpose of giving all the non-aid and discomfort that is possible to the enemy, it may be stated that neither the United States nor its allies need feel any great concern lest Germany gain supremacy of the air by the use of the so-called "flying tanks." The brave Lufbery may have been sent to his death by one of these alleged new German inventions, but the Huns have nothing on the Yankees. It is not permitted to tell the story in very great detail, but this much may be given for bedrock fact:

Within a comparatively short distance from New York there is being manufactured, in hitherto unknown quantity production, an airplane built of material that cannot burn, as the material of poor Lufbery's machine burned, and it can be made in the same quantity production in any country where there is labor to do the work. Indeed, these machines can be turned out almost as rapidly as Henry Ford can turn out "flivvers" or cylinders for the Liberty Motor. If all Americans and all their war allies cannot be of good cheer at this news, then "cheer up" has no meaning for them.

The only thing about the invention that may tend to dampen our national ardor is that it is not the product of native inventive genius. To give the name of the inventor would be to identify the airplane. At this time that cannot be done. It may be stated, however, that he is a native of a European country, neutral in this war, and he has been working on his invention for several years. The company which is manufacturing it, however, is all American. So convinced has the Government become of the practicability and great usefulness of this new aircraft that its manufacturers are now executing a Government contract.

At the plant where the machines are manufactured some of them are now being fitted with the Liberty Motor. If motor and plane work well together, and tests already made indicate that there will be no trouble on this score, the Secretary of War may make almost any statement he likes regarding the number of aircraft the American Expeditionary Forces will have at their disposal at any given time, and nobody will be able after that time to accuse him of exaggeration. So confident is the manufacturing company that it has solved the problem of aircraft production that when I spoke to one of the officers of a production of 500 a month he replied:

"Why, my dear Sir, that is no production at all. But I do not purpose being drawn into any sort of a talk about our machine. We do not need any publicity; we do not want any publicity, and we're not going to have any publicity if we can help it. Besides, our tongues are tied officially, and the knot is sealed with the Government seal."

Now, what are the aircraft requirements of the American forces in Picardy

ONE YEAR OF HOOVER'S CONTROL. FOOD ENOUGH FOR ALL ALLIES

Taking a Chance on His Faith in Nation's Loyalty, the Administrator Has Succeeded in Using Volunteer Spirit to Assure Supplies for Democracy's Hosts

Below is the record of a careful inquiry to determine just what has been accomplished in one year of Food Control by the United States Government.

The vital result is that the Allies in Europe are assured of enough food to keep them going until the next harvest, while this country is equally sure of adequate supplies. But the American Nation must continue the same economies and sacrifices which it has undertaken successfully in the first year of war.

ALONG the allied battlefront and throughout the allied nations American food is now being distributed in greater quantities than ever before. But for the food this battlefront and these nations would not have the strength to stand up and fight. Fifty per cent. of the food for the Allies must now be sent from North America.

In an office at Washington, as plain with its beaver board wall covering as that of the Superintendent of some third-class mining camp, there sits from 8:30 A. M. to 7:30 P. M. daily the man who is chiefly responsible for this flow of food to the Allies. He has, in a true sense, become Food Administrator for the Allies as well as Food Administrator of the United States, though Herbert Hoover would be the first to disclaim that distinction; but in support of it might be cited the fact that with him the needs of the Allies come first, as due them for what they have borne and are bearing; next come the food needs of the United States. Both must be satisfied.

How have they been satisfied? What has been accomplished? Every American has contributed to the results, though what these are has been subordinated to the campaign for food saving. It is a fitting time to ask the question, for it is just a year since Mr. Hoover took charge of food conservation, though the law creating him Food Administrator was not passed until later.

Take wheat: Owing to the shortage of last year's crop we had scarcely 20,000,000 bushels above our normal consumption and seed requirements. Practically all this had been shipped by Christmas. Then, in January, came the British Food Commissioner's urgent call for 75,000,000 bushels before the new crop, if the Allies were to have food enough to carry on the war. In response to that call, the American people saved 50,000,000 bushels out of their normal consumption; it was shipped to Europe, and the war goes on!

For the last four weeks wheat consumption in this country has been 40 per cent. below normal. Whole communities have "sworn off" from wheat, for the pressure of the Allies' needs is now at its highest. In the list are many churches and lodges; at the top is an entire State, Texas. From July 1, 1917, to March 31, 1918, America has exported to her allies 80,000,000 bushels of wheat and flour, or 124 per cent. of the amount available for export on July 1, while a year ago, during the same period, we exported to the Allies only 51 per cent. of the amount available for export.

There is another side, in what has been accomplished in wheat price stabilization. In the face of the wheat shortage this is what has been brought about: In May of last year the difference between what the farmer got for his wheat and the wholesale price of flour was equivalent to $5.68 a barrel; in early May of this year the difference amounted to 64 cents. In May, 1917, the wholesale price of flour at Minneapolis was $16.75; it was predicted that it would go to $20 a barrel and higher; in early May of this year the price of flour was $9.80 a barrel, a decrease of 41 per cent.

Exports of rye and rye flour from the beginning of the fiscal year, July 1, 1917, through March, 1918, were 32 per cent. larger than last year; of barley 55 per cent. larger, of oats and oatmeal 34 cents larger.

Before we entered the war we were exporting to the Allies 50,000,000 pounds of pork a month. There was even at that time the menace of a hog shortage. When we entered the war the high prices offered by the Allies had increased our exports of pork to 125,000,000 pounds a month. A severe cut in our reserve supplies was the result. In 1917, a month before the conservation program went into effect, the export of pork had fallen to 70,000,000 pounds a month. In March of this year the amount of pork exported to the Allies amounted to 308,000,000 pounds, more than six times the normal and 50 per cent. greater than any previous month in the last seven years. There is in addition 1,100,000,000 pounds of pork and pork products in storage. This is what "porkless days" have done.

Our average monthly production of hog products is 750,000,000 pounds.

Before the war our average monthly exports of beef to the countries of the Allies were less than 1,000,000 pounds. During the last two years we have averaged about 22,000,000 pounds a month. In January the Allies called on us for 70,000,000 pounds a month for the next three months. In March we shipped 86,000,000 pounds of beef and beef products to the Allies. This was 20 per cent. larger than any previous month in seven years and more than twice as great as the highest amount exported in any month in the four years before 1915. Our cattle have not increased since the war, and these increased drafts to the Allies have been provided by reducing our own consumption. It is a result of meatless days.

The production of beef in the United States is about 650,000,000 pounds a month.

Our annual saving on sugar is expected to foot up 400,000 tons. A year ago the wholesale price of refined sugar was 8.33 cents a pound; in April, 1918, with sugar much more scarce, it was 7.3 cents a pound, a decrease of 12 per cent. In the same period the margin between the price of raw and refined sugar was reduced from 2.12 cents a pound to 1.3 cents. A reduction of one cent a pound means a saving to the people of the United States of $16,000,000, measured by annual consumption. As to general price changes since the Food Administration has been in charge, the index number of producers' prices for March, 1918, shows an increase of 27 per cent. over August, 1917, while the index number of consumers' prices decreased 13 per cent. Wheat is the only commodity the price of which the Food Administration has authority to fix. For other commodities the prices may be reached indirectly only through regulation of profits. By far the greater part of the reductions have been through volunteer agreements—about 90 per cent., it is estimated.

That, briefly, shows what has been done in food conservation. How has it been done?

Mr. Hoover can't tell; neither can any of his aids, for there is something to be accounted for that does not get into records. A European Food Administrator could give full explanation, out of records, for he has a stringent system, through food cards, which reaches every consumer. It is an explanation that concerns discipline, but what discipline has reached the millions here who have observed the wheatless days and the meatless days?

By Harris & Ewing

Herbert C. Hoover on White House Steps Last Week.

One of Mr. Hoover's aids in trying to explain fell back on a story.

"A man came up from my State," he said, "to attend a conference that concerned one of the most important food industries in our State. This man is a prominent official at home and a citizen of much influence. He was aroused over proposed interference in the industry by the Food Administration. 'We won't stand for it,' he said. 'It isn't fair. We are willing to be reasonable; we don't ask to make what we are entitled to, but this proposal is too raw. If Hoover insists on it, we'll go after him as he never has been gone after before.'

"'Better wait and see what he says,' I suggested.

"After the conference the State official came to me. 'How much longer can Germany hold out on their food supply?' he asked. I told him that Germany was practically self supporting before the war, and had since seized some of the richest farm lands in Europe. 'But,' he broke in, 'it doesn't matter. We'll get them in the end. Of course, we have to make every sacrifice; think of what the Allies are doing over there. All that's worth living for is at stake! We're in to the limit. Hoover can take the whole industry if he wants it, do with it as he pleases. We've got to win. At a time like this who would think of profit?'

"That man did not seem to know that a change had been wrought in him, that something bigger than he had ever known before had got hold of him; for the first time he realized what we are standing for. And you see he wasn't forced to do anything!"

Voluntary—that is the word nearest to an explanation of what has been accomplished. More than 100 of the Washington staff give their services, paying their own expenses, and many of them are not men of large wealth, but persons who have resigned their positions to come to Washington for work with the Food Administration; in the national organization there are more than 4,000 who work for nothing and pay their own expenses. Others, it is added, merely accept what it costs to live in Washington. They have forgotten about the connection of money with work.

These volunteers, deriving their inspiration from Mr. Hoover, who in the beginning made the stipulation that he receive no pay for his services, carry this spirit to Omaha and Memphis and other towns. Producers' organizations receive them with frowns, and, in the end, tingling somehow with a new feeling about the war, wonder what has struck them. This is a sample, related by a Hoover aid in Washington:

"One of our men went out to confer with a hog producers' association in the Middle West. They were up in arms and had protested against any interference with the price. They wanted more money instead of less; the time had come for a clean-up, and they demanded the right to make the clean-up. That issue, soon after our representative began to state the situation as it actually was, dropped out of sight, and the really important issue came to the fore. The meeting ended with a resolution in which the members of the hog association pledged themselves not to kill another hog for family use or eat another piece of pork until the Food Administration asked them to."

Other volunteers in other sections had experiences as remarkable.

The third step was the preparation and distribution of written propaganda for food conservation. The volunteers believe wholly in their work; they consider it a rare privilege to be a member of Mr. Hoover's organization. Whatever they prepare, therefore, has the impulse, the emotional drive, of deep conviction. They are well posted on the restrictions which the Food Administration has through the license control of wholesalers, but their purpose is to arouse the volunteer spirit in the consumer and to set it eagerly to work. So that even in preparing a new placard they strive to evoke the ideal of democracy and of service without compulsion.

One of them, a college professor, pointed to a recent utterance of Mr. Hoover on "The Motive of Service":

"Aside from the prime necessity of protecting our independence and our institutions, there is but one possible benefit from the war, and that is the stimulation of self-sacrifice in the people, the lifting of its ideals, and the diversion from its peace-time inclinations toward the purely material things in life, to a strengthening of the higher purposes. I do not say that such compensations are full compensations for the war, but they are at least ameliorations of the terrible currents which are theatening our existence. Therefore we felt if there could be brought home to the sense of every American household the necessity of this personal and individual sacrifice we would have spread the opportunity for service beyond those who sacrifice in

NEW YORK CLUBMEN IN WAR SERVICE

Many Members Are Above Military Age. Rosters of Organizations Show How

France. Six have been decorated—Arthur Blumenthal, '13, French War Cross; W. S. Dell, '16, French War Cross; E. F. Butler, '06, Serbian War Decoration; J. R. Greenwood, '05, French War Cross; Earl Dodge Osborn, '15, French War Cross, and E. D. Townsend, '05, French War Cross.

Sixteen members of the club belonged to the regular army or navy before the war; practically all the others in service are volunteers. The Princeton Club possesses the unique honor of including in its membership the one man in the country who belongs to both the army and the navy—the Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States.

The Harvard Club is keeping, through its Committee on Military and Naval Service, the most detailed and accurate reports possible of the members of the club who are in war service. It has listed the members of whom it has record in two classes: those on active service, including only those who are in the army and navy of this country and of its allies, and those who are in actual field service in the Red Cross or Y. M. C. A. and the American Ambulance Service; and an auxiliary list of members engaged in all other war service, including State Guards, Diplomatic Service, Red Cross service in this country, and service on war committees or missions, official or otherwise. While the records are necessarily not complete, they offer interesting detail concerning the members listed. The report, in part, follows:

The committee has records as of May 1, 1918, of 1,246 members in active service and of 731 rendering auxiliary service, a total of 1,977. The total membership of the club, resident and non-resident, old and young, is 4,857. It thus appears that one out of less than every four members of the club is in active service and that one out of less than every three members of the club is rendering some war service. Of course, this record would be much better if the committee had fuller information.

On Jan. 1, 1918, the committee had records of 914 members in active service and of 337 in auxiliary service, or 1,251 in all. In the four months since then there has, therefore, been an increase of 332 in active and of 394 in auxiliary service, or of 726 in all.

The members of the club in active service are distributed as follows:

Total	195

The committee has record of 290 members in the army and of 32 in the navy who are already on foreign service.

Since the beginning of the war, so far as reported, 27 members of the club have died in the service of this country or of its allies or in consequence of war conditions.

Of the 1,246 members of the Harvard Club in active service, 195 were graduated from the university before 1900. The oldest member with the colors is August Belmont, 1874, who is a Major in the Aviation Service, Signal Corps. Among the members who have been killed in service were Sergt. Major Norman Prince, Colonel Raynal Bolling, Captain Edward McClure Peters, Jr., and Lieutenant Edward H. Perry. The two Major Generals who belong to the club are Generals Goethals and Wood.

There are seven Roosevelts on the Harvard Club service roster, which does not include Colonel Roosevelt's three younger sons. Robert Bacon, 1880, is a Colonel on General Pershing's staff, and his three sons, Major Robert L. Bacon, 1907; Captain Gaspar G. Bacon, 1908, and Captain Elliot C. Bacon, 1910, are in the United States Field Artillery. Former Police Commissioner Arthur Woods, now a Lieutenant Colonel in aviation, is a member of the Harvard Club, as are Major Elihu Root, Jr., Infantry: Ensign Vincent Astor, U. S. N., and Ensign Junius Spencer Morgan, Jr., U. S. N. The youngest member of the Military and Naval Service Committee, Lieutenant J. S. Brown, Jr., U. S. F. A., has recently been decorated for bravery. Most of these men, and many others, are members of several clubs.

The committee has established and maintained a bureau for the advice of members, and has issued seven bulletins to bring the opportunities of war service to the attention of the members. It has co-operated with various branches of the War Department, War Trade Board, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Military Training Camps Association, and other organizations.

The Harvard Club established the first of the National Service Clubs for the use of soldiers and sailors in New York City. This club, which was opened at Thirty-third Street and Seventh Avenue last Fall, has been used by more than 61,000 soldiers and sailors. It is supported by the Harvard Club, and the club members give their time to act as hosts to the uniformed guests.

The Yale Club, which has a membership of about 4,650, reports members in service as follows:

The club has also given the entire ground floor on the Forty-fourth Street side to the Four-Minute Men, who have established there the New York Headquarters for that splendid organization.

The Yale Club has co-operated in every way possible with the Food Administration and other conservation committees of the Government. The management has pledged itself to serve wheatless bread at all meals in the clubhouse until the new wheat crop has been gathered. W. V. Griffin, Secretary of the Club Committee of the United States Food Administration, sent the following letter of appreciation to the House Committee of the club, under date of April 26:

"The Club Committee of the Federal Food Administration has asked me to tell you how much it appreciated the help that Mr. Cashin (Superintendent of the Yale Club) gave in our endeavors to get the clubs to go on a 'no-wheat' basis. Experiments were conducted in the kitchens of the Yale Club, the results of which showed that it was possible to comply with Mr. Hoover's request that the clubs give up the use of wheat."

On May 13 Dr. William Russell Collins of the United States Food Administration addressed a meeting of the Yale Club employes in the main dining room of the club on the subject of conservation of food in wartime. About 300 employes attended.

The House Committee of the club has extended the privileges of the club for an indefinite period to all officers of the army and navy of the United States and her allies. Under this policy the club has at present 320 guests from the allied service.

The Yale Club Ladies' Auxiliary of the Red Cross and the Princeton Woman's Association, now a Red Cross Auxiliary, both organized for war work in the Spring of 1917.

The Columbia University Club report is brief, as this is one of the smaller clubs of the kind, having a membership of between 1,800 and 1,900. Its report is as follows:

The Columbia University Club has 260 members in the service, by far the greater number being in the army. There have been three deaths in the service, viz., First Lieutenant Edward Bedinger Mitchell, '01; Sergeant Gilroy Mulqueen, '16; Newberry Holbrook, '11.

During the Liberty Loan campaign the club had the honor of entertaining twelve of Pershing's heroes back from the front, as well as a number of Canadian soldiers.

The Columbia University Club cooperates with the army and navy authorities and the War Camp Community Service in providing accomodations for officers passing through the city.

The club contributes largely to the Columbia University Service Bureau in France.

Two members of the Columbia University Club—Lieutenant W. H. Wallace and Lieutenant G. Hinman Barratt—have just received the French Croix de Guerre.

Unfinished Tomb of James Gordon Bennett

Owl 200 Feet High Was to Have Been His Mausoleum—Stanford White's Death Ended Work on It

IN the studio of Andrew O'Connor, sculptor, at Paxton, Mass., there is a pencil drawing of a great owl mounted upon a high pedestal, and a simple model of the owl itself in clay. The two are all the work which at the time of Stanford White's death Mr. O'Connor had done toward a design for the tomb of James Gordon Bennett.

James Gordon Bennett Memorial That Was Never Finished.

Mr. Bennett had commissioned Stanford White to design his tomb, and had given him specific directions. Mr. White had called in Mr. O'Connor, who was working with him at the time, to make the model for the owl, and the work had got well under way. But when in June, 1906, Stanford White was killed, Mr. Bennett let the whole project of the owl tomb drop.

The enormous owl was to be not only James Gordon Bennett's monument but literally his tomb. It was to stand on the Bennett land in Washington Heights, a gigantic statue 200 feet high, of which about seventy-five feet was to be the height of the pedestal. As Mr. Bennett explained his idea to Mr. White, the owl was to be hollow, and was to contain his sarcophagus. Two steel chains were to be hung from the top of the owl's head, and midway in the monument Mr. Bennett's coffin was to be suspended.

Through the interior of the tomb a circular staircase was to ascend from the bottom of the pedestal, around the coffin and the great iron chains, up to the eyes of the owl, which were to be windows looking out over New York City. The monument was to be open to the public. The material was to be glazed granite. The high ground on which it was to stand would have formed a suitable vantage point.

It was only a short time before Mr. White's death that Mr. Bennett gave him the commission. Like Sarah Bernhardt's in Père la Chaise, Mr. Bennett's tomb was to be finished and set up at once, to be a monument to him and an arresting feature of the city's "scene" while he was still living.

Camouflage Now a Regimental Essential

Men and Women Learning Art of Deception from Lieut. Towle, Who Tells Them How to Give Low Visibility to Telephone Poles and Other Things

RECENT orders of the Government to the engineering department of the United States Army to stop enlisting men as camoufleurs in a special camouflage division ends a chapter in military camouflage in America. A little more than a year ago it was doubtful whether or not the army would have any great use for camoufleurs in the forces abroad. By the recent decree military camouflage is made an essential in every regiment, like engineering, trench digging, map making, road building, and sharpshooting. There are now, according to military camoufleurs in New York City, about 500 expert camoufleurs abroad with the Pershing forces. The new order makes it necessary for each regiment in every training camp on this side to have at least sixteen camoufleurs to train other men in the new art of camouflage. Whence will these new camoufleurs come? Who is to make them proficient, when even the best-trained "old" military and naval men admit ignorance?

Until the airplane came in the cavalry was the scouting arm of the army. Now a large part of the cavalry of the United States Army has been dismounted and put to machine guns. The airman is the scout. This was the chief factor in raising camouflage to its present rank of importance. A mounted scout could scarcely be deceived by artificial camouflage. Now the scout passing at heights of about fifteen hundred feet cannot tell whether the camouflage, if clever, is artificial. His kodak, however, is not so easy to fool. It will record many things which escape the eye.

For that reason lights and shades, depressions and knolls in the terrain, and shadows have to be carefully studied by the military camoufleur. That makes it necessary for him to know shade and tone values as they register on the eye of the birdman and on the camera lens.

Under the instruction of Lieutenant H. Ledyard Towle of the 71st Infantry is the New York Division of Military Camouflage, in which the men belong to the new national army and wear the uniform and insignia of the engineers, and on the sleeve the letters, "M. C."—Military Camoufleur. They include landscape gardeners, artists, miniature painters, portrait painters, photographers, woodworkers, mural decorators, draftsmen, and engineers. It is probable that these men will be used to instruct the various regiments in military camouflage.

An observer need only follow these camoufleurs to the sixty-acre tract which the City of Yonkers donated to Lieutenant Towle for camouflage work, or into their great classroom in New York City, to get an idea of the chief methods of teaching the value of depressions, color values, lights and shades, and locations. There are adjustable wires that tilt the miniature terrain boards to just the desired slant, so that the soldier can view them from the angle of a sharpshooter, as if from an airplane, from the rear or from in front. Gauzy curtains create an illusion of various lights at different hours. Thus light blue curtains make the twilight just before dawn. Light rose and blue and yellows make dawn, noonday, and dusky curtains the evening.

From 1,500 feet telephone poles, camouflaged, disappear. Dugouts with a path crossing over the roof are like the side of the hill. Even the gray, blue, and red caisson wagon moving along the road is a blur of colors. Canvasses in triangular shapes tied to the foot of the telephone poles, outward and on both sides, conceal the road. To an observer on foot or in the air at a thousand feet the hill looks deserted—an almost treeless plain with no distinguishing feature save a neglected old path. Yet that hillside harbors six dugouts, several observation and listening posts, men, cannon, machine guns, and a network of telephone wires.

Beyond Yonkers there are trench sections with "No Man's Land" and its barbed wire entanglements and dugouts. The trenches are dug so deep that the heads of the men do not show above the surface, and the sod removed to dig them is replaced. The openings of the dugouts of the trenches are not, as is sometimes supposed, far behind the trenches. They are in the trenches with the entrance on the enemy side. Bombs may fall at the mouth of the dugout, but seldom inside.

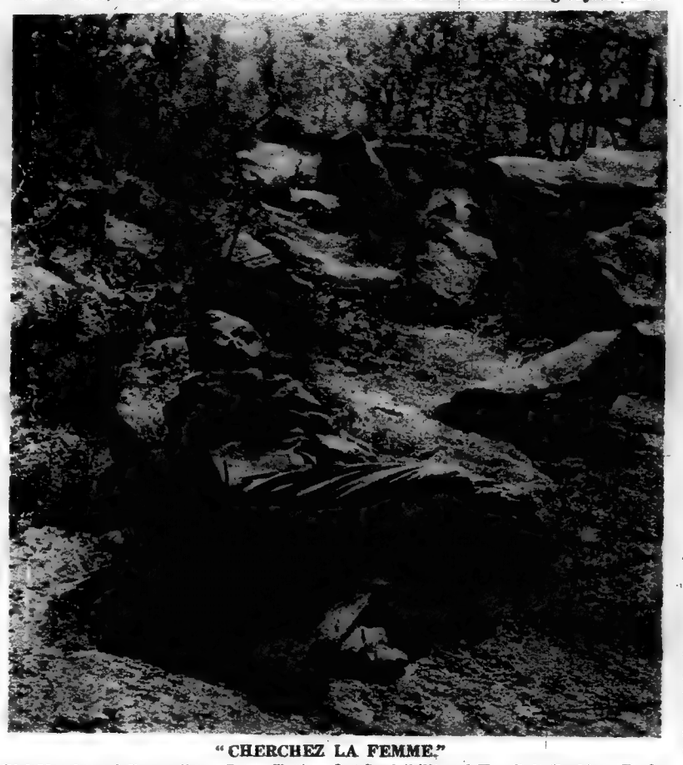
"The obvious is sometimes as good as the invisible," Lieutenant Towle said recently. "For instance, the famous dummy fleet the British used. Another camouflage to which the Germans were dupe was a red cannon, scantily camouflaged, placed by the British at the summit of a hill. The cannon was visible to every German scout flying over it, but it seemed so obviously a fake that not a single enemy bomb was dropped on it. Yet it held its position for a long time, and at night poured its stream of fire into the enemy.

"The same idea is carried out by the American camoufleurs, who model dummy men and guns for decoys. The enemy air scout sees a partly camouflaged cannon or machine gun with its men bending over it at work and the smoke pouring from its nozzle intermittently. He cannot see, completely hidden from view, a real cannon whose men are firing a deadly volley from under cover, and whose ammunition comes to them through tunnels.

"Such experiments are being made by the military camoufleurs at Yonkers. There are other tricks to be learned, for they also do their own painting of army equipment before using it. Although an ambulance or army truck may not be entirely invisible on account of the various backgrounds it must pass, it can be mottled into a very poor target. In motion it will appear as a blur caused by heat rays, for it is mottled in the colors whose values constitute colors which the sun's rays would make."

Of late naval officers have visited the military camoufleurs to learn more of the art. The marines also are studying the art.

At first natural camouflage was used almost entirely. A clump of trees and brush hid a whole machine-gun company, a group of rocks harbored a listening post, and a deserted mill might hold a regiment. But the enemy has learned that even the "trees and stones hear," and a natural camouflaged refuge is never wholly safe from air attack now. The most innocent seeming object is nevertheless an "object," and therefore a target for the scout, whereas a perfectly smooth hillside, with no distinguishing marks, may be almost entirely undermined, and yet not arouse suspicion.



"CHERCHEZ LA FEMME."
Girl Member of Camouflage Corps Trying Out Invisibility of Her Suit Beside a Rock on Washington Heights, New York City.

Lieutenant Towle's men learn camouflage from the defensive and offensive points of view—how to advance under cover and how to defend themselves under cover. They have invented scouting and camoufleurs' and sharpshooters' suits which, when worn by the soldier, make him appear like a bit of the landscape, as a boulder, a log, a stump, or a part of the foliage of a tree.

According to military camoufleurs in New York City, there is an increasing need for workers in camouflage abroad. Not only camoufleurs on the lines and with the army in active service, but behind the lines to prepare military equipment. The Board of Education as its bit toward the war has furnished much material used by the various military vocational schools in New York City, thus relieving the army of the cost. The camouflage division has received the materials for their workroom experiments in this way and other equipment from the Government. They are the pioneers in American camouflage. The school before being federalized was started by the American artists. It is composed of enlisted and drafted men. Their camouflage work is but part of their training, for without knowledge of military tactics and training they would, according to Lieutenant Towle, be of small value as camoufleurs.

American women camoufleurs are being trained according to the same method as the men, under the Women's League for National Service and under Lieutenant Towle. Discussing their work, he said:

"There isn't any reason why the women shouldn't do as well as the men as camoufleurs—that is, in making the materials behind the lines. It isn't heavy work, but it demands ingenious workers, skilled in details."

Tryon Hall, the old C. G. K. Billings place on Washington Heights, bought by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., to be given, ultimately, to the city for a park, is the spot chosen for practical experimental work by the women. Hither they go with Lieutenant Towle to try out their camouflage suits and be photographed, wearing them, in different positions, to see that they blend with different colors of the landscape and would be invisible to the enemy not only on the firing line but on the plates of the enemy photographer.

This is the most serious work that has been undertaken under the auspices of the National League for Woman's Service. The members of the Camouflage Corps, of whom there are about forty, confidently expect to cross the water to assist in the camouflage work at which English and French women are already busy.

They will not be accepted by the Government as regular workers and enlisted for the service until they have completed their training and shown that they have made good, but the fact that Lieutenant Towle is on leave in order to instruct them is sufficient proof that their work will be considered.

There is no age limit, up or down, for women joining the corps, but each member must have had some practical technical training before she joins. This keeps from the corps very young girls. The members are young women who are self-supporting. They are artists, architects, metal workers, wood carvers, photographers, &c. It is an exceptionally versatile and responsible group. They take a three months' course under Lieutenant Towle. The first part of the course is devoted to instruction in modern methods of warfare which is given through lectures and with official photographs and diagrams. The pupils must understand what they are to conceal and why before they begin to learn the methods of doing it. There is a regular military drill once a week in the 71st Regiment Armory, and Tuesday of each week the work is conducted in the open—on Washington Heights.

Each member of the class makes and develops her own camouflage suit, according to her own ideas, with the foundation of instruction that she has received. Suits as they have been constructed by the girls so far are in one piece, like a diver's suit, with a hood covering the head. A human face shows white in the distance and the corps is experimenting with veils as face coverings.

Earth brown is the usual foundation color, and upon this go yellows, greens, grays, and splashes of black. The girl who is the central figure in the picture wore a suit which, on close view, had the effect of being slate gray with large splashes of color of a darker tone. It blended into the natural tones of the rocks so that the color was undiscernible. The photograph was taken by a photographer at a distance of a few feet. At a distance at which an enemy would take the photograph the figure would be invisible.

3,000 Planes a Month Now America's Output

ing of recruiting may have been due to the fact that the training schools could accommodate no more recruits, or it may have been because there was not a sufficient quantity of training planes. At any rate, the understanding is that recruiting will soon be resumed, and young Americans with aspirations to become warriors of the air will have no need to go up into Canada and enlist in the Royal Flying Corps. Any discussion of the human element in the aircraft situation may be dismissed, therefore, with the statement that there is practically no limit to our man power, there are plenty of training camp accommodations, and, in a very short time, there will be a sufficient supply of training planes.

The situation regarding the airplanes is somewhat different. It must be remembered that all the warring nations had three years of advantage over the United States in bringing aircraft production to its highest efficiency, because they had been fighting three years when we began. Some of our aircraft producers had foreign contracts, but not many; and the aircraft industry in the United States, on that day in early April when we threw Uncle Sam's hat into the ring and decided to make the world safe for democracy, was at a low ebb. Although two young Americans invented the aircraft, people of the United States, generally speaking, took no very intense interest in doing their traveling by air, and it was extremely difficult for aircraft manufacturers to keep going, even in a small way.

But with our entrance into the war, the whole situation changed. Aircraft war as they would like to have had, their numbers kept on increasing until today the Aeronautical Society of America has in its office in the Building of the United Engineering Societies at 33 West Thirty-ninth Street a list of 185 American manufacturers of airplanes and airplane parts. Nor does the long list indicate in any accurate way the potentiality of American aircraft manufacturers. The reliance of this nation, at present, for quantity production of airplanes must be placed in just about twenty plants. The most important of these are:

Aeromarine Plane and Motor Corporation, New York; Boeing Aircraft Company, Seattle, Wash.; Burgess Company, Marblehead, Mass.; Continental Martin Company, Fisher Body Corporation, Standard Aircraft Corporation, Boeing Aircraft Company, and the L. W. F. Engineering Company.

Now, how many finished airplanes can these twelve or fifteen concerns that are known to have Government contracts turn out in a given length of time, or rather how many are they turning out?

Suppose we don't deal in futures. The Aircraft Production Board and the Committee on Public Information have been unfortunate in making predictions, no doubt thought to be based on accurate information when they were made, but which could not possibly be fulfilled. Therefore, let us deal with actual produc-

being manufactured go to France. The new machine, of which mention has already been made, has the unique advantage of being able to be shifted from an observation plane to a bombing plane so quickly that the time taken to make the shift need not be taken into consideration. It is neither my business nor anybody else's business, except that of the United States military authorities, to know or to tell just how many of just what kind of planes are being shipped to the battlefront.

But this may be told: Many of the factories having Government contracts are turning out some of the four different types of plane—battle planes, observation planes, bombing planes, and training planes. The Standard Corporation has been confining its attention chiefly to training planes, and the same is true of the Curtiss Company. The American type of training plane is, generally speaking, a modification of and great improvement on the old Standard machine. The other planes being turned out are, in practically all cases, reproductions or American modifications of British, French, and Italian machines. Indeed, I suspect that it is quite within the bounds of exact verity to say that some of the best features of the German machines have been "swiped" by our manufacturers for the fighting good of our American fliers overseas. It would be strange if this were not true, because our allies have sent to us many German planes that have been captured, like the Albatross and the Taube, as well as samples of the best types of all the allied machines.

The rather general opinion in this country seems to be that of all the world's aircraft the French planes are the best. This, I find, is not the opinion of many airplane experts. Most of them are of the opinion that the Italian planes are the best in the world. They rate the French next, then the British, then the German, and, of course, reserve opinion about our own until more of their work has been seen.

Furthermore, there are some airplane sharps who believe that this country should not attempt to build a single fighting plane. Their reasons for holding this opinion are two. First, so they say, the life of a fighting plane is just about fifty hours, and the life of any particular type of airplane is from eight to ten weeks. Therefore, these aircraft experts say, we can serve our own cause and that of our allies best by shipping to England and to France the materials for building fighting planes and let them be built almost on the spot where it has been seen that a type could be improved upon. To follow any other plan in the building of battle planes, those who urge this plan assert, would be just about like printing a New York newspaper in Denver, Col.

There are plenty of other experts, however, who assert that such a plan is entirely impractical. They say that in both England and France all airplane labor that can possibly be obtained is already overworked, and that our British and French allies much prefer that we shall supply our own aircraft. To the layman this statement seems to be freighted with wisdom and with truth. But, whatever may be the varying opinion of experts on the subject, the fact remains that we are building battle planes in this country, a very considerable number of them every month, and shipping them overseas. And right here it may be stated that in all of our building the manufacturers are providing reserves of machines, as the Signal Corps is providing reserves of men.

It has been stated above that the reserves of men should be 40 per cent. of the fighting force. A safe reserve margin for machines is 100 per cent. The Dayton-Wright Company is providing reserve machine power to the extent of 75 per cent. Some experts hold that this reserve strength is not enough. But at any rate everybody agrees that the machine reserve should be not less than 75 per cent., and many hold that it should be 100 per cent. Therefore, for every thousand machines flying beneath the sunny skies of France and of Flanders there should be either 750 or 1,000 machines, or their complete parts, behind our lines. When we know, then, that the building of one airplane really means the building of three-quarters of another one or the whole of another one, the American people may get some notion of the figures here given of the extent to which we have speeded up aircraft production in comparatively few months.

In talking with aircraft experts, I have been somewhat surprised to find that many of them hold that, of all the different types of planes, the bombing plane is the most important.

"Of course," said one of my expert friends, "the battle plane is important, its pilot is as brave and as daring as they make 'em, and the stories of the air fights of the 'aces' loom large in the imagination. But the single and double fighters, when the size of the armies in this war is considered, do not do an abnormal amount of damage. The observation and signaling planes are the eyes and the ears of those who direct the fighting plans. But the bombing plane, carrying tons of high explosives, may wipe out several regiments in a single flight or destroy miles of communications. That is real damage, and it makes the enemy wince. The air bombers are the real air devils."

American aircraft plants are turning out a very considerable number of "air devils" every week. And battlers, bombers, observers, and trainers all have to be equipped with the engines to drive them. The Liberty Motor may not yet be a complete success, but the fact remains that, in spite of all its faults, it does work. One engineer, and a very eminent one, told me that the Liberty Motor could never be used in fighting planes, because its vibration would shake the planes to pieces. And the vibration was caused, he said, because the Liberty Motor was a 12-cylinder engine, the cylinders set V-shaped and shaving an angle of forty-five degrees, when it should not be less than sixty degrees. All right. That's what the books say, and that may be the soundest sort of theory, but the fact remains that Liberty Motors are pushing battle planes today at a speed of between 135 and 140 miles an hour and, so far, the vibration hasn't been great enough to disturb anybody.

Furthermore, the Liberty Motor is being turned out in quantities. Henry Ford is turning out the cylinders—cylinders for every single Liberty Motor that drives a flying machine—and he has found a way to produce Liberty Motor cylinders in quantity similar to the way in which he produces automobiles in quantity. There are just three operations in producing cylinders for the Liberties. These operations might be described about as follows: r-r-r-r—s w i s h—biff—and there are your cylinders. They say in Detroit that, when Mr. Ford gets a little time, after the war is over, he is going to put in operation a plan to turn out a Pullman car train of ten cars, with a high-power locomotive attached, at the rate of 500 a day. He says that story is a dodgasted lie.

But there are other airplane engines besides the Liberty, and we are making them—making them every day. Over in New Brunswick, for instance, the Wright-Martin people are turning out the Hispano-Suiza, an eight-cylinder V-type engine, developing about 160 horse power. In the course of my investigation I found persons who said that the Hispano-Suiza was not adapted to the driving of a fighting plane. I ran that story down and found the fact to be that the Hispana-Suiza drove the planes in which the great French ace, Captain Guynemer, did most of his killing of boche fliers. If the Hispana-Suiza was good enough for Guynemer, it ought to be good enough for almost any American flier. Then the Hall-Scott motor, four-cylinder, 130 horse power, and the Gnome, seven-cylinder rotary, 90 horse power, and the Sturtevant motor, eight-cylinder, 90 horse power, are being manufactured here and can push airplanes very handily. Furthermore, our supply of motors can easily keep pace with the production of airplanes.

And so, after our several attacks of national nervousness and biliousness and peevishness and heart disease and near-apoplexy, we find that our Uncle Samuel is not so badly off for airplanes as he might be. A production of nearly 3,000 planes a month isn't so bad, and production is steadily increasing. So be it resolved, That we stop damning everybody in general and the Government at Washington in particular, that all the official crooks be sent to State prison, if they can be convicted, but that we stop calling names until the jury has brought in convictions, that we get out of the swampland of dumps and into the meadowland of smiles, and—Cheer up!

One Year of Hoover's Food Control

giving their sons to immolation on the national altar."

Mr. Hoover took a chance on his faith in the American people. That is the uncertain quantity he undertook to deal with, on a hazard that a mere Prussian materialist would have regarded as inexcusably reckless; the response of the American people to the appeal for voluntary conservation is the one part of the food saving that cannot be explained; it is too deep for that; they did not have to—something utterly unintelligible to the Prussian materialist, but it is sufficient to say that M. Hoover's faith was justified. It is assured that the Allies' needs will be provided for until the next harby the enforcement of the rationing system.

The crop prospects are full of encouragement, but the same self-denial will be necessary by the American people even if there are bumper yields. A surplus is needed to face the future without apprehension. Food saving also increases the shipping space for the Allies and our own troops; the more food that is conserved in this country the more ships can be withdrawn from the longer routes, as to South America. It takes a ship twice as long to go from an allied port to Argentina as it does to come to this country or to Canada; in addition, the danger of loss from submarine is greater. Just recently, on account of the greater demand for ships by the United States and States would face many more difficulties than it does in Europe. Fifty per cent. of the people of the United States are either producers or live in close contact with the producer, and effective restraint on their consumption by rationing would be a problem no European food administrator has had to face; in Germany, however, this very phase of the problem has presented the worst difficulties. In addition, owing to the great variety in habits of consumption among the industrial population, another difficulty would be raised in employing a rationing system. In some parts of the South workers consume no more than two pounds of wheat a week, using other and less needed substitutes for the nutrient qualities of that cereal, while in some parts of the North the worker uses eight pounds of wheat a week. In this commodity a rationing system would force more wheat on the Southern worker than he wants and would cut the supply of the Northern worker below what he needs.

A third consideration is that a rationing system would impose a great cost on the Government.

In Mr. Hoover's opinion only some unexpected emergency, such as a disastrous slump in the sugarcane crop prospect, would make the installation of a card system necessary. If it were required that normal consumption be reduced 75 per cent., it could be handled only by means of food tickets. The same situation might be brought about in wheat if the crop were suddenly struck by smut.

The Boundary Lines of European Nations, as Drawn by the Gaunt Hand of Hunger.

Circle represents total population under rule of Central and Allied Powers, (the United States excepted.) Black area represents deaths by famine; lined area, deaths by fighting.

The rationing system weighs heavily both on the people and on the administrator of it, and in this country the possibility of its introduction can be made more remote by increased simplicity of living and the elimination of all waste. Mr. Hoover thinks that the comparative short term of office of European Food Commissioners is due largely to the friction that is caused coming more and more closely interrelated, 50,000 tons of shipping have been withdrawn from the sugar trade between Cuba and the United States. These ships were transferred to the service of the Allies, whose needs are pressing. It may be necessary to reduce our present consumption of sugar by 15 per cent.

Mr. Hoover's sway over the staff of the Food Administration might lead one to expect what is called a "tremendous personality." On the contrary, you hardly know he is in the room until you get right up to his desk, and he is shaking hands, with a trace of a smile. He does not emphasize what he says with clenched fist, as a master of men is expected to do. As he talks, you do not think of Hoover at all, but wholly of the food needs of the Allies and ourselves; you apprehend those needs as never before, and Hoover seems to have forgotten himself. That is probably the secret of it—he has forgotten himself, and he makes others forget themselves, first the circle of his associates, and through them the greater circle of the nation—thus achieving the necessary food conservation by self-denial instead of by compulsion.

French Mayor's Praise for American Red Cross

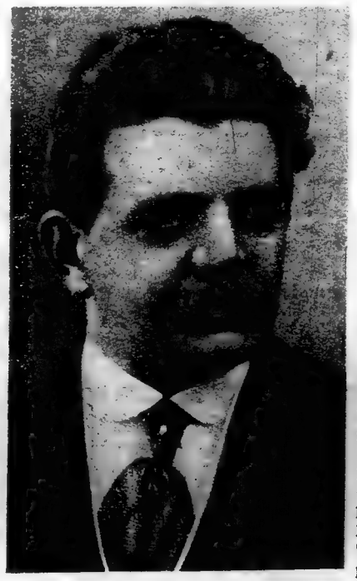
It Has Done Fine Work in the Past and Has Great Opportunities for the Future, Says M. Herriot, Chief Executive of Lyons

By EDOUARD HERRIOT,
Mayor of Lyons, Senator from the Rhone, and ex-Minister of Food Supply of France.

SINCE some of my American friends do me the honor of calling me a Frenchman of American tendencies, perhaps it is not out of place that I should tell the many contributors to the American Red Cross about the beneficent use to which their generous gifts have been put. And as I am a civil administrator, I shall occupy myself especially with the services rendered by the Red Cross to the populations back of the front.

On the civil side, it has wisely worked out a program of ultra-modern specialization; its Bureaus of Refugees, of Reconstruction, and of Re-education of Mutilès may be classified as war works. Its undertakings for children and for the tuberculous represent, on the other hand, something more permanent—they express American collaboration with the movement for conserving our French race that Professor Lannelorque insists upon as so useful, after the numerous trials through which our dear France has passed. In aiding us in this social task, the intelligence of our allies is truly enlightened; it has undertaken an effort which proves not only the goodness of the American heart, but the largeness of the American view. To put science at the service of goodness and of life—is not that the most perfect program we can oppose to the diabolical genius of Germany, for which science is only an instrument of torture and of death?

I will insist then above all on the services which the Children's Bureau and the Bureau of Tuberculosis can render us. It is with these sides of the Red Cross that I am most familiar, for I have seen these bureaus working at close range, and I wish to bear witness at this point to France's appreciation of scientists like Dr. William Palmer Lucas and Dr. William Charles White, who direct these bureaus of the American Red Cross. On March 4 last, for instance, we had at Lyons a meeting at which Dr. Lucas was present—a meeting which brought together members of all our local associations for children's welfare. A commission was named in which each such association is represented. With the collaboration of Dr. Clifford W. Grulee of Chicago, resident medical delegate of the A. R. C. at Lyons, we are going to work out a program which aims, above all, at educating our population. There is a method in this work, and method is the first condition of success.



Edouard Herriot, Mayor of Lyons.

For my part, I very much admire the technical expertness of the directors of the Red Cross work for children. In the first place, they make their own investigations at first hand. They study our great cities one after the other—Paris, Lyons, Marseilles; in this last city they promptly decided to create a children's hospital to treat, in especial, the gastro-enteric diseases which have helped to make child-mortality so high at Marseilles. With the collaboration of the scientific and administrative authorities, the Americans have worked out their plans. Under the direction of American physicians and nurses, they are busy forming, on the ground, groups of well-trained French nurses to execute their program.

Our friends of the American Red Cross have already accomplished admirable results. I have seen their methods in operation at the Hospital Saint-Eugénie, near Lyons. At Plessis-Robinson, about six miles outside of Paris, a sanatorium has been established which bears the honored name of Edward L. Trudeau. They have completed our sanatorium at Blingny, and have made over the château of Yerres for the same purpose; they are preparing an annex to St. Joseph's Hospital at Paris. They make regular inspections of our barracks for the tuberculous, and assist us in perfecting them. This work is already making itself felt. It is so active, so steady, so persistent, that this modest résumé, when it reaches you, dear friends and allies in this time of suffering, will be far from complete. The Red Cross is developing in proportion as the need develops.

To provide a temporary home for the unhappy man separated from his family by tuberculosis, to give him the essentials and a little more, what a generous work has already been done, and how it has touched the sensitive heart of France! But you have done more and better things than that; it is, above all, in the name of our children that I wish to thank you with all the fullness of our gratitude. How happy must be the thought that each of you has contributed to the saving of a little boy or a little girl who in years to come will bless the name "American"!

And now the American Red Cross has undertaken a great campaign of education. Its ardent spirit seeks to serve the entire youth of France. Working with the most modern methods, based especially on the use of moving pictures, it is spreading the gospel of hygiene and waging a war against infant mortality. I see few limits to its program, and I can easily believe that it expects to reach out soon into new fields of endeavor.

Our co-operation ought not to cease. Our common task is to labor to build up a finer humanity. Our common duty is to fight against the slavish system of the Germans. To temper science with good-will—that is our common watchword. History will record the results of this noble association. France has riches which it only asks to share with you. In these bloody hours you are helping to care for its suffering and glorious body. Receive our thanks. I have spoken of my admiration and friendship for Drs. White and Lucas. I cannot even name all the other workers in this wonderful Franco-American fraternity: Folks, Devine, Margaret Curtis, Hunt, Chevrillon, Harper, Evans, Barton Blake, Kellogg.

* * * At another time I should like to study in detail their individual rôles, so various and so useful. But how could one fail to thank you also, generous subscribers to the Red Cross, who have drawn on your resources and your savings to help this struggle of good against evil?

Lorraine Will Build Monument to First Americans Killed

NEAR the village of Bathelémont, in Lorraine, close to the spot where the first American soldiers were killed in France, a monument to their memory is being erected, not by any special group or organization, but by all the people of the country roundabout. In the Department of Meurthe-et-Moselle, where Bathelémont is situated, and where three Americans lost their lives on Nov. 3, 1917, there is not one town or village, from Nancy, the capital, to the smallest hamlet, that has not contributed.

It is made of granite from the nearby Vosges, and it was designed by Louis Majorelle, a well-known French artist who in the early years of the present century was the leader of the "Nancy school" of modern art that revolted against the dictates of Munich. The decoration on one side shows three stars for the three soldiers from America at the joining of France and the United States in a common cause.

The stone is being raised in one of the many little valleys of Meurthe-et-Moselle, at the foot of a slope on the summit of which rise the ruins of the village of Bathelémont. It is a rolling green country—where the war has not torn it to pieces—not actually mountainous, but full of little hills and sudden valleys, with beautiful meadows here and there on the hillsides. The present firing line is not far from Bathelémont. Lunéville is about twenty miles away—the nearest town—and Nancy, the capital of the department, is not far distant. The Mayor of Nancy, M. S. Simon, has been very much interested in the monument and largely responsible for its erection.

The man who has had most to do with the raising of funds and the making of arrangements, however, is the Prefect of Meurthe-et-Moselle, M. Mirman. He is spoken of in France as one of the civilian heroes of the war. Through all the months of war he has been everywhere, helping the refugees, cheering his people the thistles and cross of Lorraine.

On the other side is this inscription in French:

"Here, on the soil of Lorraine, rest the first three American soldiers killed by the enemy, 3 November, 1917: Corporal James B. Gresham, (of Evansville,) Private Thomas F. Enright, (of Pittsburgh,) Private Merle D. Hay, (of Glidden,) Company F, 16th Regiment Infantry, 1st Division.

"As worthy sons of their great and noble nation, they fought for Right, for Liberty, for Civilization, against German Imperialism, curse of the human race.

"They died on the Field of Honor."

The design itself uses the historic cross of Lorraine, with its two arms, to express things done" in all sorts of ways to make life less hard for his people. Since the American soldiers began to arrive in Meurthe-et-Moselle, M. Mirman has been in close touch with them, and has worked with them in every possible way, and the monument to the first Americans killed owes much to his energy and interest. Immediately after the soldiers were killed M. Mirman and M. Simon—who is also pointed out as one of the war's civilian heroes, especially in these last six months when Nancy has been so often under fire from the air—began to discuss the possibility of a monument to them, and the taking of subscriptions commenced almost at once.

Monument to be Erected in Lorraine to First Three American Soldiers Who Fell in France.

Embers of Revolt in Austria-Hungary

Dr. Masaryk, Head of Movement to Fan Into Flame the Discontent of Subject Peoples Under Hapsburg Rule, Discusses the Situation After His Arrival in Washington

DEMONSTRATIONS, riots, and local revolts against the ruling powers are occurring almost daily in Austria-Hungary. If these scattered fires were to connect into a great flame, sweeping over all, there would be revolution, the crash of the Hapsburg dynasty, and the early and complete defeat of Germany assured. Within the confines of the Austrian Empire seven peoples with national aims are struggling against the Austrians and the Magyar Junkers for escape from a yoke centuries old. From the first the war has had but one meaning to them; it was at last to bring democracy, liberty. Because the United States was founded in revolution against tyranny, they looked to the United States first for help, but until now the United States has been the greatest disappointment of all.

This was not charged to cynical indifference on the part of the people of the United States, but to the fact that the great issue which would bring these peoples their liberty, assure the defeat of Germany and lay a real foundation for permanent peace was hidden from our eyes by the surface complexities of the Austria-Hungary question. The effect of the attitude of the United States until now, it is asserted, has been to discourage the efforts of these subject peoples against the Hapsburg rule.

When President Wilson issued his call on the belligerents for their aims, before America entered the war, the Entente, in regard to Austria-Hungary, stated in January, 1917, that the Italians, Slavs, Rumanians, Czechs, and Slovaks must "be liberated from foreign dominion."

That was regarded by those peoples and the others concerned as meaning that the victory by the Allies would bring their long-sought freedom from Austrian domination. And when the United States entered the war the step was hailed with joy by the revolutionists among the subject peoples in Austria-Hungary as promising that the world's greatest democracy was to come to their aid.

In the President's address to Congress on Dec. 4, 1917, preceding the declaration of war against Austria-Hungary, he stated:

"We owe it to ourselves, however, to say that we do not work to impair or to rearrange the Austro-Hungarian Empire. It is no affair of ours what they do with their own life, either individually or politically. We do not purpose to dictate to them in any way. We only desire to see that their affairs are left in their own hands, in all matters great or small."

In stating the war aims of the United States on the following Jan. 8, the President said:

"X. The peoples of Austria-Hungary whose place among nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured should be accorded the freest opportunities for autonomous development."

It is plain both from expression and context that the President referred to the people of Austria-Hungary and not to the rulers, and meant that the people should be left to determine their own affairs as they thought best; but the people, those of the subject nations, declare that this can never be while they are a part of the Austrian Empire. They say the effect of these announcements, though plainly not so intended by the President, has been to repress revolutionary hopes and activities among the subject peoples concerned, as if the right course not only from the standpoint of a political offensive that, well developed, may prove the turning point in the war, but also from the broader standpoint of making democracy safe for the world. One of these events cited is the recent evidence that Germany is interested most of all in holding Austria-Hungary intact, as her bridge to the East and as an indispensable block in her scheme to subjugate Russia. Both these schemes would collapse with the collapse of Austria-Hungary.

These views are to be brought home to the United States as never before and for the first time by a powerfully organized movement. Dr. Thomas G. Masaryk, President of the Czecho-Slovak National Council, which is also a provisional republican Government for Bohemia, recently arrived in Washington to lead the movement. His career reads like that of some potent international figure in our own days of revolution. He has risked his life many times for his principles. He began life as a blacksmith's apprentice, but rose to be Professor of Philosophy in the University of Prague before the war. He is now recognized as the foremost living Slavonic scholar. He early became interested in the democratic movement in Bohemia and soon became its leader. He was elected a member of the Austrian Parliament, but gave it up to devote himself to the political education of his nation. Dr. Masaryk opposed Austria-Hungary, and at the outbreak of the war he was sentenced to death and all his property was seized. He escaped to Paris, where he founded the Czecho-Slovak National Council, which now has branches in all the allied countries.

Dr. Thomas G. Masaryk, Foremost Living Slavonic Scholar, Who Has Just Come to This Country.

After Dr. Masaryk's escape his daughter was imprisoned in revenge; she was formerly a settlement worker in this country, and her release was finally brought about through the protest of American women's societies.

In Russia Dr. Masaryk organized the Czecho-Slovak prisoners into an army of 50,000, which he expects to see transported to France. Some of the men are already at Vladivostok. The main problem is shipping. Dr. Masaryk has just come from Japan, where he entered into negotiations for the transportation of the Czecho-Slovaks to this country and is encouraged at the prospect. As a demonstration to the people of this country of the ardor of the men of Bohemia for the democratic cause, Dr. Masaryk is desirous of seeing the army cross this country on its way to France. They are commanded by a French General.

"Germany's aims have been completely unmasked since the Brest-Litovsk Treaty and more recent developments," said Dr. Masaryk in Washington the other day, "and two things are needed to insure their defeat now and for all time.

"One way to block Germany, per-of the United States have no conception of what Austria-Hungary is, if they think of it in terms of their own union of States. Austria is not a country, not a nation. Austria-Hungary is a dynasty held together by an army, a navy, and a bureaucracy. It has the support of the Austrians and the Magyar Junkers and forces its rule over half a score subject peoples. There are seven of prominence — Czecho-Slovaks, (Bohemia,) Poles, Ruthenians, Luthenians, Jugoslavs, (Serbians, Croatians, and Slovenes,) Rumanians, and Italians.

"These are all oppressed peoples, held in the Austrian Empire against their will. You Americans of today have no conception of how they long for liberty, because you have never gone through the experience. But your forefathers knew, before the Revolution which brought the United States into being. They, however, had to endure no such wrongs as we have. Thirty thousand Czech civilians have been executed since the beginning of the war.

"Think of your time of struggle, when Washington was hard-pressed. Think what it meant to you when France came to your aid. That is what we ask of you today, to come to our help, and at the same time to take a step that will lead to the defeat of Germany.

"Nothing pleases Germany so much as the talk about preserving the integrity of the Austrian Empire. It is as if you were doing her fighting for her, upholding Germany's plan of Mitteleuropa, for Mitteleuropa exists today and Austria-Hungary is its most important link. Look at that map," and Dr. Masaryk pointed to a map on the wall of his room. It was, he explained, an official map of Germany, lately issued, and showed the routes to the East laid out to connect and hold together Mitteleuropa. Around his own country, Bohemia, Dr. Masaryk had drawn a blue line to indicate its strategic position, a big wedge, between the Germans and the Austrians.

"See those dotted green lines?" he continued; "they are the routes. Follow this one, from Berlin to Prague, to Vienna, to Belgrade, to Constantinople, and Asia Minor. See how its success depends on holding Austria-Hungary intact every step of the way until Belgrade is reached. Even if the war were ended today and this alignment left as it is, Germany, if defeated in other ways, would go on plotting to bring her great dream into realization.

"What will put an end to Germany's dreams forever? Buffer States between Germany and the East. Note Bohemia's position between Germany and Austria proper. The independence of Bohemia would be a guarantee against Mitteleuropa, such as no written treaty could insure; a span of Germany's great bridge would drop out.

"Look at the other dotted line; that is two to every one of her present European enemies.

"Poland, it will be noticed, plays an important part on this second dotted line. Take it out of German control and there is a permanent gap in that bridge. The Allies have declared in favor of an independent Poland, and that declaration was not only statesmanlike, but just. The same sound reason holds in the case of Bohemia and the other subject peoples of Austria-Hungary; the independence of each would be a gap in Mitteleuropa."

"Would you have each independent of the other?"

"Yes, let each have the independence it has so long struggled for, and if they desire to unite, or as many of them as so desire, let them unite.

"It is plain that Germany's purpose is to make Finland, Courland, Lithuania, and Poland German provinces. They are even now determining what German Princes they will place over them, just as they placed a German Prince over Bulgaria and used him to further their aims when the time came to call on him.

"The Germans and Austrians realize the danger of a revolution in Austria, and are doing everything possible to keep the pressure on, and they are hoping that no encouragement will come to the revolutionists from America or the Allies. The Czech troops, as the Poles, Transylvanians, and Jugoslavs, have been scattered so that they can do no harm. In the ranks on either side of a Czech you will find a German soldier. In Bohemia, troops from Hungary are sent to prevent an uprising among the people; the Czech troops were all sent to some other place.

"When such methods are employed to prevent a people from asserting their strength, when civilians are shot down by troops brought from the outside and as alien to the Czechs as the Germans would be to you, how can a people so beset win their liberty unless help comes from the outside?

"I think, too, that the American people begin to see the falseness of Austria. The Prussian is brutal beyond words; he says he is going to knock you down and does so; the Austrian is merely false and mean and the tool of the Prussian. An illustration is Austria's announcement of apparent willingness to accept President Wilson's program against annexations; now, we know that at that very time Austria was threatening Rumania and getting ready to annex Rumanian territory. But this is not a people that speaks, not a nation; it is a dynasty held in power by force of arms and striving by whatever means to preserve its control.

"Neither one of these means of blocking Germany in the east should be delayed. If the Germans are permitted, unobstructed, to subjugate Russia and turn it to their purposes, as they are fast doing, then they will turn from the east and conquer in the west. There are about 500,000 German prisoners in Russia, as against 1,500,000 Russian prisoners in Germany. The reason there has not been an exchange is to further Germany's aims. The 1,500,000 provide the cheapest of labor for Germany, but what is more important, the Germans in Russia are used to spread German propaganda.

"Now is the greatest opportunity in the history of the world to make a stroke for democracy and against imperialism by freeing the peoples of Austria-Hungary and of Eastern Europe from domination by foreign races. A peace

Machines Which Turn Out 60,000 Checks a Day

They Are Part of Uncle Sam's Equipment to Eliminate Errors and Save Time—Incidentally, They Save Clerk Hire—Answering Questions Mechanically

FROM one aspect Washington becomes more like a huge factory every day. Wherever mechanical appliances can be installed to save labor or time it is done by order of that most arbitrary Chief of Staff, Necessity. There are offices now in the departments in Washington, where an immense amount of clerical business must be transacted each day, which look like the operating room in the shoe district in Massachusetts—row after row of complicated machines, different in kind. Some take the place of ten persons, some twenty-five, some fifty; and one, run by two girls, does the work of 100 typists.

Experts go from one bureau to another to see where new appliances may be introduced. Likewise new methods are constantly supplanting old ones, the wholesale taking the place of retail methods. Formerly in Washington time was a remote consideration; each job stood out by itself as something to be completed with all nicety. Checking systems against errors had been devised which were probably as near perfection as humans could devise. They were cumbersome, it is true, but with time they could find a mistake of five cents in any far-off corner.

War is putting all these systems to a new test—is it worth the trouble in money and labor? Here is an illustration: In one office there was a checking-up system which required an annual maintenance outlay of $20,000. How much did these toiling clerks actually save Uncle Sam a year? Efficiency experts investigated. The average was found to be $80 annually. The system is to be abolished; the clerks will be transferred to something more productive. Everywhere the cobwebs of immemorial red tape are being torn down and cast into the waste basket. Single transactions, that used to follow one iron-jawed groove, are now massed into a large group, owing to the vast expansion of bureaus, and one swing of a lever does the work.

Questions are answered by machinery, for instance: "How many colored troops were enlisted from the Sixteenth Congressional District of Pennsylvania?" One might imagine a clerk looking it up in a book and making a count; instead, a bunch of cards is run through a machine—b-r-r-r—and there is a result! So, too, the question: "How many children of soldiers enlisted from the Nineteenth New York will become 18 years old next year?"—this being the time when children pass out from allotment payments. Another bunch of cards passes through a machine in a single operation, and there is the answer. It is the application of the punch-card machine to war's need of time-saving. The cards have holes in them opposite the respective classifications, and the machine picks out and counts the total of any hole desired.

Messengers long ago became scarce in Washington. The necessity of communication between departments and bureaus has multiplied a thousandfold. A device has been installed in numerous Government offices to take the place of the telephone, now much overloaded because of heavy business. For example, when the Adjutant General's Office desires to send a message to another branch of the department all that is necessary is to write it out on a pad with a certain pen electrically connected via the telephone wire with a similar pen in the other office. An answer is received in the same way.

In the various auditors' offices figures must be added each day to hitherto unheard-of proportions. Under the old way, with adding machines where each item was listed separately on a tape, the task in some offices would border on the insurmountable. New machines, which do not list the individual items, have been introduced. These add 6,000 items an hour, 40,000 a day for one clerk, about five times as many as before.

In This Room Machines Print, Fill Out, and Sign Checks for Soldiers' Families and Make Duplicates for the Government Records.

Dictating machines have been extensively introduced in the Government offices and erstwhile stenographers sit all day at typewriter desks transcribing from the cylinders of the machines. Where uniform letters are required, automatic typewriters have been put in; these machines work on the principle of the player piano. All this work is being brought under a system, in charge of experts. In some rooms there are 200 or more typewriters.

In the disbursing office of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance more machinery is used to do clerical work than in any other bureau in Washington. All the available space in one large room is taken up by machinery; any casual observer would take it for the operating room in some manufactory and realize least of all that here checks for the dependents of our soldiers were being prepared, filled out, and signed. It is virtually an operation which passes from one automatically accurate machine to another of different pattern. The output is beyond the possibilities of what was dreamed of by the most imaginative in this class of clerical work a few years ago. As many as 60,000 checks have been turned out in this room in a day. The monthly output is now around 800,000 checks, and with each new quota from the draft the number increases, so that in transacting the present great volume of business provision must also be made for rapid expansion.

In making the plans not only was speed a necessary provision but also precaution to avoid errors in the myriad transactions attending the issuance of the checks. Manifestly, it was too huge an operation to be undertaken by hand; every resource of the latest machinery was called into service and connected in new ways for this special task, and some original devices not yet completed are to be added later. Here is the chain of mechanical operations, beginning after the amounts for the 800,000 checks have been computed:

The amount of each check, the person to whom it is paid, the address and the allotment number are placed on the plate of an addressing machine. There are at present seventy-five plate-making machines for this work, operated by girls. The plate is proof-read four times for accuracy. Then comes the second mechanical process in the check-making. This is done by what is known as the check-printing machine. One of these machines does the work of 100 typewriter operators. There are three in use, two girls to each machine. The checks are printed, ten in a sheet, with, of course, a different entry on each check.

At this point, when the plan now in use was being worked out, the question arose: Suppose some one should write that no check had been issued to a given name? It was too vast a detail to consider taking care of by hand, so it was contrived to place this responsibility also on the check-printing machine. After the impression is made on a new check the plate is held in its place for a moment, long enough for a broad tape of yellow paper to swing over and receive an imprint, which serves as the proof that this particular check was issued. The reels of yellow paper, when filled with the names of payees, are put into book form and filed.

Next is the posting machine, in charge of one girl operator. Here a comparison is made between each allotment card, showing in each case the amount paid and to whom and the corresponding check. A carriage bears the checks before the eyes of the operator slowly enough to see that each item of the check coincides with the items of the allotment card, which is succeeded by another at the same time that the check disappears from sight. The allotment card is the master, and if the amount on the check, or any other entry on it, does not correspond, a touch stops the machine.

It may be that the amount on the soldier's allotment card has been increased since the last monthly payment, and that by oversight the plate was not changed accordingly. The error is discovered here, and the plate is sent back for correction. Each check as it passes out of sight receives its serial number and then enters a second part of the machine, where a roller with an electrotype of the signature of the check is printed on each one.

Thence the checks move to the check-signing machine. Ten checks are signed in ink at once. A master pen, guided by the operator, controls and directs the strokes of the other nine pens. After this comes the slitting machine; it cuts the sheets of ten checks apart. This is followed by the sealing machine, which moistens and seals the envelopes containing the checks. Then comes the last machine in the chain of operations—the bundle-tyer. It automatically ties the letters in bundles of 200, in order. The checks are then ready to begin their trip to the families of the soldiers' dependents.

M. E. Bailey, a mechanical expert, who as chief disbursing clerk of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is in charge of this work, hopes by further improvements in the present system to be able to get out the checks within the space of a few days. He thinks it possible to make the total operation 90 per cent mechanical.

Invocation

O MOTHER EARTH, since that momentous hour
When mind creative launched thee into space
A radiant star, designed, in time, to be
The home of human-kind, the hand of man
Has ne'er so heavily been laid on thee
As now in these most sadd'ning days of war,
When all thy green investiture is torn,
Thy fruiting trees, and vines, and fragrant woods
Laid low in many a ruin-blackened mile;
All stilled the happy sounds of life, and thou
Made vast Golgotha dewed with blood and tears!
O patient Mother Earth, within whose heart
The stellar fires are smoldering still,
Hast thou no plague to sweep from off thy breast
This monster king with all his spawn of seven
For whom he seeks new principalities
And thrones, from which to vex the souls of men?
This saber-toothed Thing who craves to stand
Colossus-wise astride a trembling world,
And crush it to his lordly, iron will!
O Mother Earth, hast lost thine ancient pow'r
By quake, or flood, or subterranean fire,
To blot forever from thy tortured round
All Huns accursed who've made once happy life
A hell of groans, and tears, and hearts-a-break?

decisions, not only as to wages, but as to overtime. What we will aim for is continuity of employment by the creation of conditions that will make men want to stay. This can be done, on the negative side, by putting an end to some of the bad conditions; on the positive side by providing proper housing conditions, transportation facilities, and satisfactory working conditions.

"I feel sure of the co-operation of labor. It is exhibiting a finer spirit all the time.

"Valuable bureaus will be grouped around our organization. We have several already well organized in the Department of Labor: the Bureau of Statistics, Children's Bureau, (having to do with child labor,) and employment service. Other bureaus are provided for in a bill now before Congress: the Adjustment Bureau, Women in Industry, Dilution and Training of New Workers, Education and Information, and Housing and Transportation.

"Each of these bureaus will serve a special purpose, and it will be a great advantage in expediting the work to have them available, not only from the standpoint of present but of future needs. Suppose the Policy Board, in totaling up the present and prospective needs of the various departments, finds that more workers of a certain kind will be needed and that these cannot be provided from the existing supply. The dilution and training section will be instructed to train the number of men desired. It will be the province of the Adjustment Board to settle differences and difficulties.

"In a word, the new organization will mobilize knowledge and action under a single head. There will be centralization in some things, decentralization in others, according to their nature. In effect policies will be centralized, but the enforcement of the policies will be decentralized; each department, that is, will do its own enforcing."

"Where does the Department of Agriculture come in as an employer of labor?" Mr. Frankfurter was asked.

"In its efforts to increase production on the farms and, therefore, to prevent farm labor from being depleted. A campaign to this end has been under way, but frequently some other department has torn down, unintentionally, what had been built up, by attracting farm laborers from places where they were sorely needed.

"We are already assured of the co-operation of the great production chiefs. These men, actually in charge of turning out guns, ships, &c., realize the need of unity of direction. The same thing is true of labor. I was recently on a trip that brought me in touch with many different classes of workmen in this country, and I found the healthiest kind of a spirit, one, I think, that the country at large does not yet fully appreciate. Like most of us, our workmen have come only gradually to realize what we have at stake in this war. But I found a positive eagerness among workers to do their part. I discovered it in the remotest parts of the country as well as in our great centres. It began to be noticeable some months ago, and has been on the increase ever since. The war and its meaning have entered their thoughts, and they see the interest of the country above any other interest.

"Will there be priority in labor as in materials?"

"I want to get away from words like priority; we shall find out what each department needs and act according to those needs and in relation to our problem of winning the war. We shall constitute a centralized employment agency for the United States and thus will be able to handle any question that arises."

mouths are quickly. Their breath is anything but sweet. Their teeth are both loose and unsound.

How can you recognize Pyorrhea symptoms? Gum tenderness is the forerunner of Pyorrhea. Bleeding gums indicate Pyorrhea. Loosening teeth indicate Pyorrhea.

At tooth-brush time use Forhan's, which positively prevents Pyorrhea — if used in time and used consistently. First it brings prompt relief to gum tenderness or gum bleeding. Then it hardens gums and makes them firm, healthy defenses against a seepage of organic disease germs into the system.

And in preventing gum - shrinkage Forhan's prevents tooth looseness and tooth-base decay. Ordinary tooth pastes do not control the causes of these ills. Forhan's not only is extremely effective as a gum normalizer but in addition is a scientific tooth cleanser, too. It is cool, antiseptic, pleasant.

If gum-shrinkage has already set in, start using Forhan's and consult a dentist immediately for special treatment.

MID-WEEK PICTORIAL

From the President of the American Commerce Association

CHICAGO, ILL., MAY, 1918.

I am writing this letter as a last resort to see if we cannot secure more men willing to qualify for traffic positions paying $2,500 to $10,000 a year.

How important is the trained traffic man's work can be seen by these few cases out of thousands which occur every day. A concern in South Chicago had been shipping about 200 cars of Coke from Connellsville to their smelters. Some time ago a traffic expert succeeded in getting a rate adjustment which resulted in a saving of about $5.00 on each car. Thus on this one item alone a saving of over $300,000 a year was effected.

In St. Louis, through misrouting of freight, errors in reconsigning cars and undercharges on shipments, a railroad lost over $27,000.

A traffic expert discovered that freight rates paid by the Meeker Coal Co. were legal but exorbitant. A ruling secured from the Interstate Commission resulted in a refund of $120,000.

There are about 50,000 large business corporations and about 400,000 smaller shippers which must be protected by competent traffic men. These concerns have freight expenses running from a few thousand dollars to many thousands of dollars monthly. Yet in the entire country there are only a few hundred men actually competent to save the money now being wasted through lack of efficiency in applying the Government Freight Rate System.

Realizing the crying demand for trained traffic experts, and seeking relief, the American Commerce Association—a national organization OF traffic men, FOR traffic men, BY traffic men, offers to give men the training required to make them competent to handle the problems of most economical distribution. The instruction is given by mail and can be studied in spare time at home. The most complete and thorough training is given, and through the Association costs but a few cents a day.

Through its Advisory Council, every member of the American Commerce Association receives the help of the most prominent traffic men in America.

It is impossible to go into details in this letter, but the Association has published a remarkable book for free distribution which explains everything in detail and tells how any one may quickly learn the new profession of traffic manager. If you are at all interested in getting into this highly profitable field, paying salaries of $2,500 to $10,000 and more, write for the remarkable free book. Please state whether you are a beginner or whether you have had previous traffic experience, and give your present age and occupation. Address American Commerce Association, Dept. 225, 206 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill. (American Commerce Building).

Problems in American Art Industries

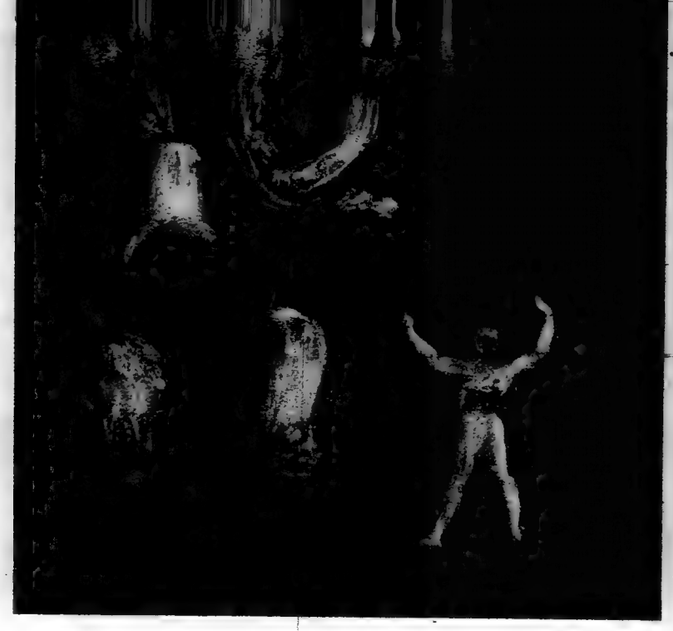
benefactor to all mankind. The same praise and commendation should be given to the man who manufactures ten yards of silk or tapestry with the money formerly required to make a single yard."

The natural conclusion is the necessity of educating all the different people concerned in the making of an artistic industry to understand the common aim and to establish a high ideal in their methods of attaining it; and the parallel necessity of educating the public to ask for artistic results in machine-made articles and to reject whatever does not reach a high standard. This is so difficult a problem that any one may be for-

Even the German artists were unwilling to let industrial art be compressed into the forms prescribed by the State and took matters into their own hands toward the end of the nineteenth century. They got together and made their united force so strongly felt that they were intrusted with the management of the large exhibitions formerly managed by the industrials, and many of them became connected with business in the way of general supervision of the artistic side of industrial products in all departments. This was the beginning of a general plan for raising the industrial



"His Act," from a Monotype by Lee Fitz Randolph. (On Exhibition at the Language Institute.)

A MEETING was held at the Architectural League this month at which architects and manufacturers discussed the subject of American textiles. Examples of recently woven fabrics were shown, and the handwoven original in one case was shown side by side with the machine copy for the purpose of demonstrating the power of the machine to reproduce a design with the essentially artistic quality of a fabric woven by hand at the expense of days of labor. Beautiful effects in cotton fabrics also were shown which hitherto could be obtained only in either wool or silk. Even the mellowing influence of time which has turned crudity into beauty is rendered in the machine-made fabric enabling it to start in the scale of beauty where the old fabric ended. The revelation of the power of the machine was the same as that given on a larger plan in the recent textile exhibition; but only one purely American design was shown, as the weavings chosen were elaborate and complicated examples of machine work for which the American artist is not yet sufficiently trained.

When the desirability of his entering the field is sufficiently felt, and technical schools of sufficient thoroughness and excellence of equipment are provided for him, such an exhibition as this will wear a different aspect, a fresh, youthful aspect more lovely than any imitation or emulation of the loveliness of the age ever can be. But the intelligently composed group of textiles offered for the consideration of the architects and manufacturers the other evening has an inspiriting message in spite of the absence of characteristically American design; it says one thing with an unmistakable accent of authority, that the machine is worthy of the artist's highest endeavor.

In his address at the meeting William Laurel Harris explained the existing situation and the necessity of working for collective interests rather than individual triumphs. "Today," he said, "it is necessary for the artists and manufacturers to obtain a common understanding for their future development and prosperity and for the ultimate prosperity of our country.

"The prosperity of the textile industry in earlier days, the golden age of architecture and the allied arts, as with all the other arts and industries, was dependent on the patronage of a few very wealthy people or small groups of people, rather than on the will of a vast majority of mankind.

"Today, however, the conditions are reversed, both for art and industry, and the most prosperous occupations are those patronized by the greatest number of our citizens.

"We Americans were prompt to recognize the true principles of democracy in our laws and customs, but have been slow to realize the inevitable power of the majority in building up our industries and our arts and crafts.

"The necessity of a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, as enunciated by Lincoln on the battlefield of Gettysburg, pronounced for us a principle of human life that is no less inevitable in the world of art than in our Government.

"To prosper modern art must create and perfect works of beauty suitable for every home and obtainable by the majority of our citizens. The greatest benefactor to our industries is the man who will take inexpensive raw material and by the operations of machinery create textiles that are as beautiful as the silks, brocades, and tapestries of old once made by hand for the aristocracy of the Old World. The man who makes three blades of wheat flourish where one blade used to grow is publicly proclaimed a set herself to its solution. A project is on foot for the creation of a Chamber of Industry corresponding to the indispensable Chamber of Commerce, and armed with the powers necessary to co-ordinate individual efforts and obtain results not to be achieved by isolated citizens or private groups. Among these powers is the regulation of the teaching of industrial art and of apprenticeship. The creation of such a Chamber of Industry was discussed by the Central Technical Committee of the Applied Arts in the course of 1916 as one of the most important measures adapted to the elevation of the industrial arts of France, and attention was called to a very remarkable work done by M. Labbé, General Inspector of Technical Instruction, before the war. M. Labbé made the German "Gewerbeordnung" his particular study, and traced its growth from the beginning through the period when the agitation of the working classes in Germany and the critical state of industry forced the idea of favoring the development of the industries upon the Government to the early years of the present century, when the organizations formed for this purpose were all brought under the powerful hand of the State. The interference of the State has acted against the free development of art, and the French investigators naturally have found that similar organizations in France would need to be adapted to the democratic principle of the country.

The French Already Are Aware of It

necessity of pursuing a similar plan with the modifications and improvements suggested by their very different ideal of industrial freedom and personal initiative. This ideal provides for the dedication of personal taste and skill on the part of the worker to the good of the community without restricting legislation or interference on the part of the Government, and corresponds fairly to our own ideal as it is forming itself in the minds of thoughtful persons concerned for our industrial future.

Among other evidences of the increasing interest in the problems of our industrial art is the program of the ninth annual convention of the American Federation of Arts held last week in Detroit. The program was almost wholly dedicated to the relation of art to industry and included such topics of discussion as "The Relation of Art to Manufacturers," "Mobilizing the Art Industries," "Exhibitions of Industrial Art," "The Training of Designers" and "Finding Positions for Industrial Art Workers." The speakers were men and women of wide experience, among them François Monod, Chief of Cabinet to the French High Commissioner in the United States; Richard F. Bach of Columbia University, Louise Connolly of the Newark Museum Association, Walter Sargent of the University of Chicago, and Florence Levy of the Art Alliance.

OF FINE ARTS

Group Exhibition.

A very pleasant group exhibition is open at the Arlington Galleries and probably will continue there through the Summer months. The artists represented are well known, but the pictures chosen to represent them are in most instances especially fortunate in bringing out their best qualities. Occasionally an early or unusual work shows a talent at a quite unfamiliar angle, as in the case of "The Trawl Baiters," by W. P. Griffin, whose rich impasto and highly original palette are known to all exhibition visitors. "The Trawl Baiters" was painted when Mr. Griffin was only 21, and shows upon what a sturdy foundation his free later style is based. These fishermen at their work are drawn with firm decision, the values of the low-toned scheme are kept in a clear logical relation, and the color is mellow and fine. It is a promising work for a young artist and the promise has been richly fulfilled.

Paul Cornoyer's "Old House, Chelsea," is a little canvas that offers more enjoyment than one would expect from such a sketchy performance. He has managed to convey the atmosphere of age and human associations in his casual account of the picturesque mass against a sky of St. Luke's Emergency Hospital.

The Annual of the School of Architecture of Columbia University contains an interesting account, by Richard F. Bach, of the way in which the designs for the projected emergency hospital of St. Luke's Hospital, New York, were developed. Several drawings rendered by students of the School of Architecture were reproduced in The American Architect for May 23. "The drawings then shown were nothing more than preliminary studies in the form of eight-day problems," Mr. Bach says, "submitted at the request of the authorities of the hospital to aid in determining the feasibility of erecting on land adjacent to its existing pavilions a structure to be devoted to the care of military and naval patients only, and to be turned over to the Federal Government as a war hospital. In view of the excellence of the drawings submitted the School of Architecture was designated as architect of the new building. An office was set up in one of the university's drafting rooms. This was put in charge of an experienced head draftsman to guide the work of a number of student volunteers who carried out the whole project like a regular commission. In order that the difficulties of the tyro might not mar the smooth course of the work one of the school's instructors was given control of the whole project as supervising architect; another instructor revised all constructional features, and a third will follow through the actual execution of the drawings, so that from inception to completion, initial design to final superintendence of the building and materials, the sanctity of the practical professional aegis has not been disturbed and the actuality of metal and concrete has given color to an undertaking that might have savored of the usual academic task with its paper limitations."

E. L. Henry's two little pictures are in his usual highly finished and precise manner, the courtly speech of a previous generation, but in this now unfamiliar phrasing the artist conveys the essential spirit of the scene in "Going to Town," the pleasantness and leisure of a rural odyssey, two people in a one-horse chaise crossing a bridge in a landscape of Autumn colors; in "A Garden in Warwick" the clusteped charms of Summer flowerbeds, a woman in a pink gown, a happy dog, and peaceful chickens; simple scenes so lovingly depicted as to stir the pulse somewhat by their very simplicity and quiet realized against a war-tossed world.

Ernest Lawson's "Bronx River," mottled with strong color; Everett Warner's "Old House, Lyme," Robert Spencer's "The Mill Door," and J. F. Murphy's "Silence" are excellent examples of the work of these artists. There are also two Wyants, a good sheep subject by Carleton Wiggins, and a clever bit of dainty storytelling by H. M. Walcott. The other artists in the exhibition are William Hart, F. Ballard Williams, Robert Reid, W. L. Metcalf, George H. Boughton, Paul Dessar, Henry W. Tomlinson, Robert H. Nisbet, Irving Wiles, Thomas Barnett, and Henry Ranger.

$20 to $40 an Hour

No Special Experience Required
Nothing But Ambition and Ordinary Intelligence

where and Be Somebody, men who want something more out of life than merely a place to sleep and enough to eat and wear.

It's for men who are thinking of Next-Year and the Year-After and Ten-Years-From-Now, not merely from one Pay-Day to the next.

No special experience is necessary; nothing but a fairly good head on your shoulders, and a willingness to learn.

Also a willingness to do a little extra work; the Stay-With-It stuff to Finish-What-You-Start. If you are more interested in having a good time than in having a good job, then this chance isn't for you. This isn't any Soft-Snap; no Lazy-Man's-Cinch.

How Much for Overtime?

When you put in overtime at the place you now work, you probably get time-and-a-half, or possibly double pay. If you work in an office, you perhaps get supper money—and maybe nothing but Thanks.

But here's a chance to cash in on a little "overtime"—a little extra work—at the rate of $20 to $40 an hour.

Time Otherwise Wasted

It's work you can do at home—in spare time that would otherwise be frittered away and wasted.

This $20 to $40 an hour is the extra money which home-study training will put in your pay envelope during the next twenty years. The difference between skimping along on peanut wages all your life, or drawing down $50 to $100 or more a week.

Boiled down, what we are offering you isn't a job, but a wonderful opportunity.

It's What You Put in Your Head

You know as well as we that the fat pay envelopes always go to the men who have taken the trouble to get some special training; blows, as well as while on duty. There isn't any luck about it. No man can expect to make big money in any line unless he has the knowledge and training to make good. No man can expect to Get ahead without something In his head.

$10,000 to $25,000 in Twenty Years

If training adds only $10 a week to your pay, that means a difference of $500 a year. In twenty years the total difference amounts to $10,000. If training adds $100 a month to your pay—and it has done that or more for thousands of others — the difference is $1,200 a year; and in twenty years the total difference in your earnings amounts to $24,000.

Only an Hour a Day

This training takes perhaps an hour or so of spare time a day—say five or six hours a week—for one to two years, depending on the kind of work you take up. Say it's two years—a total of five hundred to six hundred hours; hours that would otherwise be dawdled away with nothing whatever to show for them.

Now count up. Isn't a difference of $10,000 to $24,000 in twenty years—all as the result of five hundred to six hundred hours of home-study training—equal to $20 to $40 an hour for the time you spend in study?

All Due to Training

If you increase your earnings by more than $100 a month — as thousands of others have — then you cash in on your study at a still goes on as long as you live.

This extra pay will all be due to extra training. If a man has the Know-How, he doesn't have to work any harder to earn $50 to $100 a week than to earn $10 a week without it.

The First Thing to Do

The time to get in line for this extra $10 to $30 or more a week is right now. A difference of $10,000 to $25,000 in twenty years is too big a thing for any dilly-dallying or delay.

The first step is to decide which kind of work you want to fit yourself for, then mark and mail the coupon. The first thing is to get the facts, including how the American School of Correspondence has helped thousands of others get out of poor jobs and into good ones. This will place you under no obligation. But the sooner you look into this, and the sooner you get started, the sooner you can look for bigger pay.

A Big New Step Ahead In Home Study Training

For twenty-one years—ever since 1897—the aim of the American School of Correspondence has been to make it easy for ambitious men to get the training that brings bigger success and greater prosperity. All this time we have been simplifying and perfecting the various Home Study courses we teach.

Now we have taken another step forward. We have adopted a plan that takes away the last excuse for holding yourself down to a poorly paid job instead of preparing for a good one.

The tuition charge—including text books, examinations, postage, special attention of instructors and everything else—is now made by the year, exactly as at residence schools, instead of by the entire course.

$25 entitles you to a full year's instruction, with everything paid for. If you have the time to give to your studies, you can thus complete an entire course at a cost of only $25—and your money all refunded if after ten lessons you aren't satisfied.

Perhaps one of the best indications we could cite as to the standing and practical thoroughness of the American School of Correspondence is the fact that many big and well-known firms—such as the Willys-Overland Company of Toledo—have arranged to give some of their selected employees the benefits of our Home Study Training entirely at the firm's expense. This also shows how much importance the big firms are placing on the problem of getting properly trained men.

Getting into condition. Group of new National Army men out for a morning hike

© Underwood & Underwood

Raw recruits for the new National Army arriving at their cantonment

Remaking the physique of the nation

In the last twelve months, 1,500,000 men have quit their jobs and gone into training camps.

This is just the beginning. The draft bill places 10,000,000 men—40% of the male working population—on the list available for military service.

These men represent the pick, the physically fit, of the nation, yet in the training camps they are being remoulded completely. They are being raised to higher standards of physical perfection.

The army recognizes that whatever work there is to be done, a man must be in the best physical condition. Whether it is in an outpost of the trenches or at a desk in the Quartermaster's Department, strength, nerve and endurance are necessary. All the men, therefore, must go through the same vigorous physical training in camp.

The energy and driving power of the army depends upon the stamina of each individual. The same is true in industry. Gradually we are coming to realize the fact. Army and Navy standards of health, character and personal efficiency will prevail in industry after the war.

It is up to every man not in service to live up to the new war standards of efficiency. He can do this only by living up to the new physical standards.

A man does not have to be in an army camp to get sufficiently fit for his daily office work. He can do much by himself toward the improvement of his health. There is no better exercise for the business man than walking.

Every man can walk at least part of the way to his business every day.

Conserve your energy

But the most important factor in building up health, is the conservation of your energy.

Most of the fatigue we suffer, and the personal inefficency we blame ourselves for, result from ignorance of how to conserve energy. The average man wastes energy in thousands of different ways.

One of the biggest wastes arises from the fact that he doesn't fully realize he is in the 20th Century—the Age of Concrete, the age of hard stone pavements and tile floors. Every step on hard pavements means a useless jar and jolt to your spine. This is fatiguing. Fatigue eats up strength.

The combination of hard leather heels on hard unyielding pavements not only discourages the average man from walking for wholesome exercise, but to those who must be on their feet all day, it works an actual harm.

Besides jarring the spine and tiring out the nervous system, hard pavements and hard heels are one of the most frequent causes of flatfoot, a malady which has disqualified thousands of men from the Army and Navy.

Leather heels are no more suited to hard pavements than the sandals of ancient days. They are utterly out of keeping with the new standards of health and efficiency.

As long as you continue to wear them, your physique suffers accordingly.

The heels best suited for city wear

The heels best suited to modern hard pavements and floors, are O'Sullivan's Heels.

Because of our special process, O'Sullivan's Heels combine the greatest durability with the greatest resiliency. They are made of perfect heel material.

Buy your new shoes with O'Sullivan's Heels already attached. Good dealers sell the latest style shoes with these heels already attached. Have O'Sullivan's put on all your shoes. Every day you delay putting them on you are wasting your most valuable asset—Energy.

Insist on O'Sullivan's; avoid the disappointment of substitutes.

Don't forget Me!

I AM YOUR FUTURE CITIZEN.
I SPEAK FOR THE BABIES.
MOTHERS, WE CALL TO YOU!
Our Fathers, our Brothers are Fighting for our Country.
On US depends the Future STRENGTH of our Nation.
What will you do for us? We are your HOPE.
Mothers, we need you. Care for us. Nourish us.
Give us Strong Bodies.

IMPERIAL GRANUM
THE UNSWEETENED FOOD

is your best aid, Mothers, in this important patriotic dut, Caring for the Babies.

Your first step in this duty is Nurse Your Baby.

If your milk is scanty and lacking in nourishment IMPERIAL GRANUM will help you. Take a good, hot bowlful after meals and on retiring. It will materially improve the quantity and quality of your milk.

Next to Baby's Own Mother's Milk, Imperial Granum is the most successful food. It is rich in the vegetable protein that nourishes, strengthens and lays the foundation for a healthy future. Added to cows' milk it prevents the formation in baby's stomach of the large, hard curds that occur when the milk is given alone, and makes a food as smooth and as digestible as mother's milk.

Your patriotic duty does not end with giving your own baby the right food.

Help your neighbor. Tell her about Imperial Granum. Give her a copy of "Your Baby's Health." Ask her to write to our MOTHERS' INFORMATION DEPARTMENT, especially if her baby is ailing. This department is conducted to help worried mothers, and the service is freely and gladly given.

War Time Saving demands the use of Imperial Granum. Its cost is less than one-third as much as the highly sweetened foods, nor has its price been increased. Trial size, 25 cents. CAUTION: Do not allow your dealer to charge you an increased price for it.

With the money you save buy War Saving Stamps.

Write today for a FREE copy of "Your Baby's Health," a book that tells how to keep baby well.

Rub-rub-rub—fabrics had to be strong to stand being washed with cake soap

Washed the modern way—the Lux way—pure suds and no rubbing

Modern materials won't stand the old way of washing

REMEMBER the clothes women wore only a few years ago? Sturdy wash waists. Or else dark silks and plaids that were never tubbed at all! Muslin underwear. "Dark" petticoats. Cotton and lisle hosiery.

Today, look at the materials women wear! Crepe de Chine. Georgette Crepe. Chiffon cloth. Silk and lace underwear. Fine silk hosiery. The daintier the better.

The old-fashioned rub-rub-rub

For the apparel worn years ago the old way of washing answered the purpose. You rubbed the cake of soap directly on the garments—and rubbed hard. Sometimes you even rubbed over a washboard. You rubbed out the soap and you twisted and wrung out the garments!

Now there's a better way—the Lux way, that keeps the daintiest things new—cleanses them with never a bit of rubbing.

Lux comes in light, transparent, fluffy white flakes. It is different from anything you have ever used.

The modern form of soap

You don't rub when you use Lux. You simply dip your blouse up and down in the rich, warm suds, squeezing the suds again and again through the fabric. Then the rinsing. Lux dissolves so absolutely that three rinsings of clear, lukewarm water will carry every trace of soap out of the fabric.

You lift your blouse out—spotless.

You are truly amazed—it's so easy, so quick, so simple.

Just get a package of Lux today at your grocer, druggist, or department store—Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

To wash your sheerest silk blouse.

Whisk a tablespoonful of Lux into a thick lather in half a basinful of boiling or very hot water. Add cold water till lukewarm. Dip your blouse through the foamy lather many times. Squeeze the suds through it—do not rub. Rinse in three waters of the same temperature as the water in which you washed it. Squeeze the water out—do not wring. Dry in the shade. When nearly dry press with a warm iron—never a hot one. Georgette Crepe blouses should be gently pulled into shape as they dry and also should be shaped as they are ironed.

You can use Lux for anything that water alone won't injure!

Even in hard water, Lux makes wonderful suds

The Nestlé Permanent Hair-wave

About the New Supplementary Invention.

Dear Mr. Nestle:

"You are a fine inventor but a poor advertiser. Your new invention is wonderful." One purchaser of a "Nestol Comb" committed this to the States wires from Washington.

Is there some poet who wants to go into business to write about the Nestle Permanent wave and the "Nestol Comb"?

All we can say is, that our factories could not come up with the demand for a time and that the price we ask for this device does not stand in comparison with its value; but it is the greatest help permanent waving could have. No more "frizz," no more tedious, ineffective "water-waving," no more complaints that a loose wave would not stay. The looser you have your hair permanently waved in future, the better will be the result.

Apart from permanent waving the "Nestol Comb" is wanted for every child or woman whose hair has the slightest inclination to wave. Our illustrated particulars will explain that fully.

Price for Nestle waving from $12.00 up.

How the Front Drain Protects Health and Saves Time

Usually the drain-pipe and trap of a refrigerator are at the back. In a Bohn Refrigerator they are in front. This front drain is another of the many points that go to make up the superiority of the

BOHN SYPHON REFRIGERATOR

Health demands that a drain be cleansed frequently. In its usual location at the back of a refrigerator, the drain is hard to get at because of its position and because the contents of the refrigerator must be removed—a time-wasting nuisance. So back drains are cleaned all too seldom.

The Bohn front drain can be lifted out in one piece, without disturbing shelves or food. To cleanse it thoroughly and return it to its position requires but a few seconds.

This front drain is important not only on its own account but as an evidence of the thoroughness with which every detail of Bohn construction is thought out and worked out. Bohn superiority is traceable to this general excellence almost as much as to the special features—the Syphon System of rapid circulation; the ten-layer heat-resisting walls (with Flaxlinum); the round-cornered, non-cracking, non-chipping lining of fused Porcelain-Steel, etc. This superiority is not simply a claim; we can demonstrate it. Call if you can, or write for catalog.

M'ADOO INDORSES WAGE INCREASES; ADDS NEW ONES

Report of Commission Readjusting Railway Pay Adopted with Some Revision.

RISES NOT YET COMPLETE

Board Named to Correct Any Injustices in the $325,000,000 Award to 2,000,000 Workers.

APPROVES THE 8-HOUR DAY

Also Equal Pay for Negro Employes, as Well as for Women—Tables of Increases.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—A general order in which most of the recommendations of the Railway Wage Commission are put into effect and amendments made which will add $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 to the original estimate of $300,000,000 in increases to be received annually by the 2,000,000 employes of the railroads was issued today by William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads.

In promulgating his order Mr. McAdoo points out that the decisions are not final, and that, if injustice is found after further investigation and study, alterations will be made. For the purpose of making such a study, Mr. McAdoo provides for a board of six experts, who will hear complaints and report their findings to him. This board will be continued as a permanent body, or at least while the Government retains control of the railroad systems. The new board of railroad wages and working conditions will consist of three labor representatives and three railway executives.

The point is emphasized by Mr. McAdoo that the whole effort toward wage adjustment was made with the purpose of satisfying the workers and obtaining their co-operation with and support of the Government in winning the war. It is intimated that alterations in the schedules contained in the general order are probable after the recommendations of the Wage Commission and the changes now made by Mr. McAdoo have had a trial.

Two important principles are recognized by Mr McAdoo in his order. The basic eight-hour day and the payment of equal wages to negro and white employes doing the same work. In connection with the adoption of the basic eight-hour day the Railroad Administration made this statement.

"While this does not actually reduce the hours of employment now in effect, or increase the compensation recommended by the commission, it does establish the basic eight-hour day upon which further wage adjustment will be based."

Overtime is to be paid pro rata.

Pay of Negro Employes.

The Wage Commission recommended that negro employes receive increases similar to those provided for the white employes, but Mr. McAdoo in his order carries this principle one step further. The order provides that the negroes shall be paid the increases until June 1, on the terms recommended by the Wage Commission, and that after that date these employes shall have their wages advanced to meet those of white men employed on the same roads. At present negro firemen, brakemen, and switchmen are receiving from two-thirds to three-quarters of the wages received by white employes engaged in similar work.

The increases provided for in the McAdoo order affect principally labor for shop trades, such as machinists, boilermakers, and blacksmiths. A minimum rate of 55 cents an hour is established, and modifications made which grant to common labor increases of 2½ cents an hour in excess of wages paid on Dec. 31, 1917, when increases recommended by the Wage Commission are less than that amount.

In making these alterations the Director General, it is understood, took into consideration the necessity of paying a wage which would prevent many employes from seeking other occupations. The board of experts which has been created will make an immediate study of the problem to determine whether the alterations are sufficient to meet the conditions found. The Railroad Administration expressed the belief that the findings of Mr. McAdoo, along with the creation of the new board, would make it evident that every effort was being exerted to establish schedules which would be proved equitable and satisfactory.

Practically all of the recommendations of the Wage Commission, including that which provided equal pay for women who are doing the work of men, are adopted. Mr. McAdoo makes the specific point that "when women are employed their working conditions must be healthful and fitted to their needs. The laws enacted for the government of their employment must be observed, and their pay, when they do the same class of work as men, shall be the same as that of men."

In this way Mr. McAdoo met such complaints as have been made that some railroads were inclined to substitute women for men in an effort to keep down wages and disrupt labor organizations.

While it is understood that many protests already have been received concerning certain phases of the Wage Commission's report, it is believed by the Railroad Administration that the order issued by Mr. McAdoo and his plan for further consideration of arguments by a board of experts in which labor is repre-

Say Hindenburg Has Typhoid and Is in Critical Condition

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, May 26.—According to news which has reached Basle from Berlin, Field Marshal von Hindenburg is not dead, as reported, but in a serious condition in a private clinic at Strassburg, where he was brought by train on a stretcher from the western front, suffering from typhoid fever.

This disease is spreading among the German officers and men, indirectly owing to the destruction of waterworks by allied aerial bombardments in towns behind the German lines.

The Swiss papers remark that no official mention of Hindenburg has been made in the German press since the beginning of April.

There have been several reports recently of the death of von Hindenburg. Some were given on the authority of German prisoners on the western front.

ROOSEVELT GRIPS THE HAND OF TAFT

Diners in Chicago Hotel Cheer as the Ex-Presidents End Six-Year Quarrel.

SLAP EACH OTHER ON BACK

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 26.—Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft shook hands and slapped each other on the shoulder in the dining room of the Blackstone Hotel tonight and a fashionable company rose and cheered. The only two living ex-Presidents then sat down together at Colonel Roosevelt's table and talked earnestly for a half hour, obvious of the other diners, who stopped eating to watch the two guests. The Colonel continued eating while he talked and Mr Taft leaned over from time to time to emphasize a point, a characteristic of his, while Colonel Roosevelt nodded violently in assent.

The temperamental differences of the two men reached the climax here six years ago in the temporary wreck of the Republican Party, and the reconciliation occurred not five blocks from the Coliseum, the scene of the convention of 1912, which swept President Wilson into the chair. Once as they talked today the Colonel pounded the table and leaned over with a belligerent air that was accompanied by a smile, and Mr. Taft laughed and nodded.

Mr. Taft arrived at the Blackstone from St. Louis shortly after 8 o'clock this evening and was informed at the desk that Colonel Roosevelt was at dinner. He thanked the clerk, turned without a word and walked rapidly up the steps from the lobby to the entrance of the dining room. He stood for the fraction of a second to locate the Colonel, who sat at a little table on the other side of the room. Then he moved rapidly across to him.

Their Meeting Cordial.

Colonel Roosevelt, intent on his meal, was apprised of the visitor's approach by the stillness that marked Mr. Taft's entrance. Looking up he saw the friend of former years almost upon him. He stiffened in surprise, then flung his napkin down and rose. He met Mr. Tafts' handshake with one that equaled it. Mr. Taft's left hand flew to the Colonel's shoulder, a gesture which the Colonel returned.

The two men stood for most of a minute shaking hands vehemently and slapping each other on the back. The crowd went wild, and a cheer went up that startled them. They looked at each other and smiled and bowed to the other diners. Then Colonel Roosevelt indicated the vacant chair opposite him, and both men sat down for their meal. And thus a six years war was brought to a dramatic close.

Both men were reticent as to the things discussed in their meeting. Colonel Roosevelt, with the famous smile that radiated happiness, and maybe a trace of nervousness, refused to pose for a photograph, and consented to give a statement.

"Yes," said the Colonel, "it was a great and pleasant surprise. Mr Taft learned I was in here and came to see me. We had a very delightful half hour together. I was delighted to see him again. He is looking fully."

When the Colonel was asked to pose, he replied:

"Why, I should say not. You fellows have got enough pictures of me to use for all occasions."

Colonel Roosevelt left at 9 o'clock tonight for the West. Mr. Taft, in his room, seemed pleased, but not perturbed.

Taft Glad to See Colonel.

"I was very glad to see Mr. Roosevelt," he said, and smiled. "This is the first opportunity I've had to do so since Mayor Mitchel gave his dinner to General Joffre. Let's see, that's about eight months ago. I didn't see him then, as I had to leave hurriedly to catch a train. Colonel Roosevelt looks fit after his serious illness."

Mr. Taft laughed heartily when asked to tell the gist of the conversation.

"I should say not," he answered. "We just talked over things generally."

The recent illness of Colonel Roosevelt brought back to the memory of both men their old friendship. Mr. Taft wrote letters of sympathy, which the Colonel answered gratefully, and the way was paved for the evening's reconciliation.

Mr. Taft will leave tomorrow night for Yale to clear up some details in preparation for a year's leave of absence from the university, during which he will devote his time to the nation's interest as Chairman of the War Labor Board.

So far as is reported, Colonel Roosevelt saw none of his Chicago friends who are recognized locally as Roosevelt stalwarts at all times. At the dinner, in the ballroom of the Blackstone, he talked to 400 persons. The meeting was known as a session of the "War Service Editorial Conference." J. A. Hoel presided. Admission was by invitation. The Colonel talked for an hour and a half. The conference was supposed to be private.

Colonel Roosevelt left Chicago for Des Moines, where he will speak tomorrow. He is to speak at Madison Tuesday, at Milwaukee Wednesday, and at Detroit Thursday, departing from there at midnight for New York.

RED CROSS FUND NOW $112,097,034; GOING MUCH HIGHER

Officials Believe Daily Average of $18,000,000 Will Be Far Exceeded Today.

11 DIVISIONS OVER THE TOP

Returns at Washington Far from Complete, but Percentages Range as High as 300.

NEW YORK AND CHICAGO LAG

Philadelphia More Than Doubles Its Quota—Gulf Division Leads All Home Sections.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—With the American Red Cross's second $100,000,000 war mercy fund already oversubscribed by $12,097,304, officials tonight were setting no limit to the outpouring of dollars on the closing day of the week's drive tomorrow. That the daily average of something more than $18,000,000 would be far exceeded they had no doubt.

On the face of returns at headquarters here tonight, eleven of the fourteen divisions had oversubscribed, with the Gulf leading the home divisions in percentage with 210, but the foreign topping them all with 300. The three divisions which had not attained their quotas were expected to go over the top early tomorrow.

The returns thus far by divisions, with the quotas, follow:

Division.	Quota.	Returns.
New England	$8,850,000	$9,437,000
Atlantic	35,000,000	39,233,531
Pennsylvania	12,000,000	9,812,750
Potomac	3,300,000	4,200,290
Southern	2,850,000	3,701,700
Lake	9,400,000	11,003,755
Central	13,800,000	12,032,000
Gulf	1,300,000	2,730,804
Northern	2,200,000	3,905,357
Southwestern	7,250,000	12,000,000
Mountain	1,350,000	2,135,241
Northwestern	1,770,000	2,574,721
Pacific	3,730,000	4,611,681

On the basis of the reports thus far received, Greater New York lacks $1,830,686 of equalling its quota. Philadelphia, with an allotment of $4,500,000, has subscribed $10,231,000. Detroit has given $5,500,000, nearly four times its minimum. Pittsburgh has attained only 56 per cent. of its $4,000,000, while Chicago has turned in only 47 per cent. of its $7,000,000. Boston is another of the larger cities behind in the campaign. Worcester, Mass., has more than doubled its quota, while St. Louis and St. Paul are well over their marks.

BOSTON, May 26. — Belated reports reaching Red Cross district headquarters here today put New England's contributions to the war fund up to $8,237,000. The minimum quota was $7,000,000, and campaign leaders said indications were that this district would exceed this sum by nearly 50 per cent. The only committees to report were those of Maine and Vermont. Maine reported an overnight gain of $111,000, giving the State $686,000, as against a quota of $550,000. Vermont increased its total by $23,000 to $225,000. Its minimum was placed at $200,000.

Allied Air Raid Destroys the Liege Railway Station

AMSTERDAM, May 26.—The Rotterdam Maasbode reports that an allied air raid has been carried out over Liége. The Longdoz railway station was destroyed and twenty-six persons were killed.

The Longdoz railway station is the junction point for lines running to Namur and Maestricht.

A dispatch from London Wednesday said that that morning two bombing formations sent to attack the railway triangle at Liége dropped twenty-two heavy bombs and that large fires were started.

BAD MEAT SALES CHARGED BY ARMY

Morris and Wilson Packing Companies Face Inquiry Before Trade Board.

TEXAS INDICTMENTS FAILED

Food Law Found Inadequate for Prosecution for Camp Travis Transactions.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—Two big packing concerns, Morris & Co. and Wilson & Co., have been called upon by the Federal Trade Commission to answer charges that their representatives "sold and offered to sell" to the Government for the use of soldiers at Camp Travis, Texas, meat and other food products that were unfit for human consumption.

The Trade Commission issued this official statement to the newspapers today:

"Morris & Co. and Wilson & Co. charged with offering unfit meat for consumption by American soldiers.

"Complaints have been issued by the Federal Trade Commission making the serious charge against Wilson & Co. and Morris & Co. that they have sold and offered to sell meat and other food products to the Government with the knowledge that these products were to be used as food for American soldiers, and that these products were spoiled and unfit for human consumption.

"Thousands of pounds of unfit meat were offered for sale to Camp Travis, Texas, according to the information on which the complaints were based. Indictments were returned against the two packing concerns by a Grand Jury in the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas, charging violation of the Fourth Section of the food law, but these indictments failed. It was found that no penalty for violating this section of the food law had been provided.

"The Federal Trade Commission has been informed that, in addition to spoiled and unfit beef, the National Army cantonment at Camp Travis was offered chickens for sale which were unfit for human consumption.

"The commission has decided that selling meat products carried with it the implied representation that such meats are wholesome and suitable for such use."

The Food Administration has made one investigation of the charges and now is conducting another. The section of the Food Control bill under which the indictments were found makes it unlawful for any person "willfully to destroy any necessaries for the purpose of enhancing the price or restricting the supply thereof," and was held by Food Administration experts not to cover the charges. It was held that there was no way to enforce any penalty under this section.

The matter has been considered from many angles by the Federal Trade Commission and Food Administration, including the advisability of recommending action under the Pure Food act or other laws if the charges were substantiated. Up to this time no steps have been taken of this kind, and the decision was reached by the Federal Trade Commission to issue the com-

15,000 Germans Defeated by Polish Corps; Ukraine Rada Troops Also Fighting Foe

MOSCOW, May 21, (Associated Press.)—Attempts by the Germans to disarm the Polish troops in the Ukraine and Minsk Governments are meeting with fierce resistance.

The Second Polish Corps under General Makovitzky, stationed near Kaneff, in the Government of Kiev, defied the German ultimatum to disarm within twenty-four hours, whereupon the Germans apologized, saying that the order was a misunderstanding. At midnight, however, Germans attacked the corps, capturing one village.

The Poles intrenched and battled against 15,000 Germans, causing considerable loses among the enemy, but themselves suffering heavily. The fight continued for several days, when the Germans were driven back, losing a few pieces of artillery.

The First Polish Corps, near Rogatcheff, up to the present, has escaped disarmament by agreeing not to join the Second Corps, but a fight is expected to take place as, in accordance with an order of Prince Leopold of Bavaria, all Polish troops must be disarmed.

The Germans also are disarming Ukrainian troops loyal to the Rada, who are resisting. These troops, as well as the Poles, are supported by the peasants.

Germany's persistent violation of the provisions of the Brest-Litovsk treaty in the Ukraine, Finland, Livonia, the Black Sea, the Baltic Sea, and other occupied territory has aroused Russian hatred against the Teutonic Empire, and is calling forth many official protests every day.

The Russian commercial fleet, and even a hospital ship in the Black Sea, have been attacked by the Germans, while Russian sailing ships in the Baltic and Arctic have been unable to leave their ports because of the same menace, according to a statement sent today by Foreign Minister Tchitcherin to Ambassador Joffe in Berlin.

In Livonia, M. Tchitcherin said, the Germans have established a reign of terror, assisting Teuton Barons in the wholesale arrest of political enemies, and there have been many executions daily. The issuance of political leaflets has been made punishable by death. Labor leaders have been the greatest sufferers at the hands of the Germans.

In Finland, M. Tchitcherin charged, the Germans are supporting the White Guards in the persistent persecution of Russians, who are denied food and subjected to violence.

The Foreign Minister declared Russian property in Finland was unprotected, and demanded that the German Government appoint a commission to join with the Russians in investigating indignities Russians are suffering under an order for their deportation from Finland.

Since this protest was issued by M. Tchitcherin he has been supplanted as Foreign Minister by M. Karakan.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, May 26.—THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent talked today with the Colonel commanding an American regiment engaged in the great battle area. His headquarters were in a bare, comfortless house in a village not far from the firing line.

"As far as actual fighting is concerned," he said, "my boys have had an easy time, although of course there is a certain amount of patrol and small raid operations. But there was an enormous lot of work to be done, as in this comparatively new sector the trenches were somewhat rudimentary when we went in, and so we had to get busy right away to make a proper defense line and adequate dugouts.

"Fritz, opposite, was engaged on the same job, but his artillery found time to throw over plenty of shells. The daily average was at least five times greater than anything we had experienced on the front in the east. Villages right up behind the front were simply hammered to pieces, and I can tell you there wasn't any loafing on the dugout work during the first few days. But our casualties have been exceedingly light and our boys stood the shellfire as if they had been used to it all their lives.

"Another very satisfactory feature was the way in which the liaison worked with the French on our right, and despite the language difficulties everything went like clockwork. It is impossible for me to enter into details at present, but I can say this—the first experience of American troops in this great battle sector has greatly improved their efficiency and given them increased 'pep' and confidence."

Help Elates the French.

On the French side the satisfaction is equally great, and the Americans' initial performance has created a highly favorable impression. It is hard to exaggerate the effect on the French morale of the news that the American Army is actually realizing its promises of support—and surpassing them—at a time when France is facing the most desperate struggle since the Marne.

Everywhere on the front the poilus say: "A half million of Americans—that's the best news yet," or "Your divisions are in line now in the big battle. C'est magnifique!" One feels what a tremendous moral force to the French Army is the knowledge that America's millions are backing it up just when the enemy is "scraping his bucket" to the very dregs to get every available man, young, old, or half crippled, into line for a last great effort.

Our soldiers themselves have a splendid appearance—trained to the minute—and the fact that they have stood the big test successfully has given them the air of veterans. The food and supply and medical services have worked without a hitch under heavy shellfire and have won high praise from the French.

The "medicals" have especially distinguished themselves. There is one story of thirty men of a sanitary unit which may not yet be told, but which equals anything that has occurred in the whole course of the war for heroism and self-sacrificing devotion.

More Criticism of Y. M. C. A. Prices.

The comforts of the men are cared for by the Y. M. C. A. and the Salvation Army canteens in villages as near the line as possible. As regards the former, I have heard the same complaint as elsewhere—that attempts have been made to make a profit on the sale of cigarettes and tobacco.

The sum involved is only trifling,

American Airplanes Are Now Flying in France; German Air Activity Ceases Before Our Lines

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 25.—The first airplanes to be furnished to the American Army from the United States have arrived in France and are now in use in a training camp. These machines are of the type equipped with the Liberty motor.

For three days not one German aviator has stuck his nose over the American sector, and our aviators going back of the foe's lines have not been able to start a fight. During the last month the boche airmen confronting our lines lost twelve machines to our four, in addition to losses inflicted by the French. It is not known what is the reason for their inactivity. It is presumed that they are rebuilding the personnel of their damaged squadrons.

American airmen feel a pride in the situation which is quite different from what it used to be when the boche had the best air patrol on our sector. Our army has plenty of trained aviators who would make themselves a big factor if they had an ample supply of machines. The news that the first real airplanes had arrived in France from America after so many promises is enthusiastically received because they are regarded as the forerunners of an enormous equipment.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY, Sunday, May 26.—A German Lieutenant, a university graduate, speaking both French and English, who was captured several days ago, was taken, on his way to a French fortress, along a considerable part of the American lines of communication and through some territory in which we are making big war preparations. Today he said:

"In the first months of the year the German people were told that the war would end this year in June after a big drive. If the German people could see what I have seen in the last two days they would know that the war cannot end this year with a German victory. I believe if the German people could know what America is really doing our army leaders would have trouble, and lots of it.

"The German people, and even the officers, have been told how only a few Americans have arrived in France on account of the U-boats and that the American statements that hundreds of thousands are here are all lies. I wonder when they will learn the truth. Poor Germany!"

That it is entirely true that German officers do not believe that Americans are really in the war, is shown by the fact that the first German airman brought down three weeks ago when taken to the American field asked:

"What airplane is that?" When told it was American he replied:

"Oh, no, you are not Americans. You are Englishmen dressed up like Americans."

A German officer, taken prisoner, said that during the raising of the last German war loan all the soldiers and officers who subscribed a thousand marks to the loan received seven days' extra leave. This was corroborated by other prisoners.

Examination of recent prisoners of the class of 1919 shows a very poor physical standard. For the last three years these boys have not had enough to eat. One of them said:

"I cannot remember the day when I did not go to bed hungry."

Lack of nourishment has hampered development in physique and stamina. Officers of the Allies frequently comment on the difference between the new German soldiers and the men who faced them in 1914 and 1915.

There is much interest in the case of a German Sergeant who deserted today and came into the American trenches. He will be carefully examined and all his stories checked up to determine whether he is serious or whether he is trying to be a clever spy.

FOOD CUT IMPELS A GERMAN BLOW

Must Attack Before June 17, When Bread Ration Is Lowered, Says French Observer.

NEED VICTORY AS AN OFFSET

Germans Also Fearful of Waning Confidence of Balkan Allies, It Is Asserted.

PARIS, May 26.—"Ludendorff," said a well-informed personage last night, "must attack before another three weeks are gone or abandon indefinitely all thought of renewing the offensive. That is mathematically certain.

"First and foremost, the internal condition of Germany and Austria is such that a brilliant victory is imperatively necessary, unless the morale of both empires is to collapse with a crash. A few days ago the meat ration in Germany was reduced from nine ounces a head weekly to five and a half ounces. The utter failure of the Ukraine to carry out the undertaking of delivering wheat to Germany and Austria is beyond question.

"The Stuttgart Tageblatt and other German papers state openly that down to May 12, instead of 100,000 tons promised from the Ukraine, less than a third of that quantity had been sent to the Central Empires, and even of that quantity, owing to transport and other difficulties, less than 1,000 tons reached Germany.

Impelled to Act by June 17.

"In view of the very serious outlook, the German Government has already decided that on and after June 17 the bread ration must be reduced from eight and a half ounces a head daily to half that quantity. Unless Hindenburg and Ludendorff, then, can succeed before that date in scoring a decisive victory which shall at least foreshadow an early end of the war, the effect of this new and drastic restriction of food may well result in the most serious internal crisis which Germany has yet had to face.

"Already serious mutinies are known to have occurred, not in one merely, but in several German divisions in Russia which had been ordered to proceed to the western front. The refusal of these divisions to obey is probably one of several reasons why the offensive has been delayed.

"Another and equally strong cause for the hesitation of Hindenburg and Ludendorff is that they are keenly aware of the fact that unless the projected blow results in an indisputable success the effect in both empires, as well as in Turkey and Bulgaria, would be incalculably bad, while anything in the nature of a repetition of the check which followed the stages of battle that began March 21 might well lead in the present state of feeling in both empires to almost immediate collapse.

"The Allies on the western front are now so strong that Germany cannot cherish more than the faintest hopes of being able to inflict a decisive blow, while there is always the haunting fear that, owing to her bad strategical position in Flanders and WAR CORRESPONDENTS' HEADQUARTERS, May 25.—The enemy's gunfire has increased somewhat in violence since yesterday morning and is rather widespread.

In Flanders the shelling has been heavy around Ypres and the line of hills opposite Kemmel—Scherpenberg, Mont Rouge, and Mont Noir—and on the villages and roads near Poperinghe. The Forest of La Motte and the area near Hazebrouck have been under harassing fire, and the Lens, mining country down to Vimy Ridge and Arras has been bombarded intermittently with high explosives and gas. During the last twenty-four hours there has been a heavy fire over the British lines north and south of Albert down to Villers-Bretonneux and above the Somme, including many villages and woods like those of Bouzincourt, Engelbelmer, Martinsart, Aveluy, and Henecourt.

It seems as though all this were boiling up to a great explosion point, when the enemy will open out with all his gun power before another series of battles. Be that as it may, it is certain that the German high command is still maintaining an immense number of men opposite the French and British front prepared for immediate assault, and has used these weeks of fine weather to improve the roads, bring up supplies and shells and establish new airdromes and hospitals.

Grim Indication to German Army.

Those hospitals of his should tell clearly enough to his men the amount of sacrifice which is expected of them and the amount of blood which their high command is ready to spill in order to win a gambler's chance. What these German soldiers think of the prospect is not easy to discover, because the prisoners' talk does not always give the true psychology of their battalions. Many of them, it is certain, have a secret dread and horror of the next offensive, remembering the fearful cost of the first, and some of them are deserting before they reach the lines among the new drafts.

But it is probable that by stiffening their divisions with men of the younger classes who have been carefully doped with the belief in an early victory and early peace, and by bringing up to the attack fresh divisions who have not been used in the previous battles of March 21 onward, the enemy will still be able to count on the courage of his troops, fortified by their iron discipline and training.

In the first assaults we must expect them to be formidable, but after a severe check and great slaughter the Allies may hope to wear them down to that point of spirit which slackens offensive enterprise. Before that happens there will be intense and bloody fighting.

Not intentionally, but very really, the German high command has been kind to the Allies in giving them these weeks of comparative quietude without fighting on a big scale. Apart from the time gained for reorganization of the divisions which suffered in the long hard struggle of March and April, the training of new drafts in actual conditions of the battlefield—they are fresh men who take little time to feel at ease among the graduates of war—and the strengthening of defensive positions on the new line of front, this month without great battles has been restful to the men who were brought out of the zone of fire to quiet places behind the lines.

Ready to Go Back Instantly.

Many of them are there on short notice of removal. At any time of the day or night they may get orders to go up again to hold back another German onrush, but sufficient for them unto the day is the good there of; and, by Jove! it is very good for them to camp on ground which is not pitted with shell craters, to live again in clean, unstrafed country where death is not always ready to jump at them out of a high explosive force, and to get away from war and its sounds and sights even for a few days with wonderful relaxation of nervous tension.

Some of them had not had any rest like this, completely out of the line, for many months. I know one battery of gunners, and there are many others, that has been in action, except for a few days between the last battles, for over a year—in action to the extent of being all that time within shell range, with the duty of covering the infantry in the line.

I met officers, as I described at the time, in a dugout furnished with tapestries and chairs from a ruined village into which the enemy flung many shells each day, and it was not a healthy spot where they sat with a little head-cover which would hardly stop a pipesqueak. Yesterday I met them again down by a stream in France beyond gun range and very peaceful. The battery commander, the young man with an eye for old furniture, told me that when his men arrived they jumped out of their clothes and with one yell of joy plunged into the stream and revelled in it. The dust of battle was washed from them, and the dust that settles on the souls of men in war after too long a spell, and they cleansed themselves of its memories in this sunlit water.

An Awkward Moment.

It was rather awkward for a moment, because the Major went in with them, and also the Skipper, as the Captain is called, and at that time the Mayor of the village arrived, demanding to see "Mon commandant" and adjust the conditions of camping in this Arcadian spot. Mon commandant was without badges on his body and quite unrecognizable as the officer in command. The Skipper, shaking the water drops from his hair, bowed very politely, but knew no French. It obviously was not the time and place for a conference, and the Mayor withdrew and the battery stays under the willow trees of this oasis in the desert of war.

So now the gunners, who a few weeks ago were firing at the Germans with open sights and taking up positions which the German gunners used as target practice, are playing baseball—they learned it somehow from the Canadians—and running races and burnishing their harness so that the sun blinks to see it. They deserve this life after their hard, bad days.

Officer Plays the Grand Seigneur.

It is a queer contrast for men who lived so long in the line, and they like to realize this with lingering satisfaction.

The other night I went to a French château which, by common consent, is one of the most beautiful places behind the lines. One of the officers—he used to live once in another "street of adventure" before the war—said:

"Pretty good, this, after several months below ground in caves that would make a wild beast look sick."

He laughed with a queer sense of unbelief in its reality as he went from room to room where there were carpets, paneled walls, tapestries, and portraits of a great family of France. For a little while it amused him to play the grand seigneur, and he pointed out the portraits of his ancestors, the old bird in full-bottomed wig and the young sprigilke bonny Prince Charlie and the little lady with a rosebud mouth and roguish eyes, in a blue silk bodice, and the young abbé who might have been Aramis of the "Three Musketeers" before he left the Church for the King's bodyguard.

Then a General came in and looked round the rooms, too, with the same smile of unbelief, because he also had been a cave dweller. It is not usual for Generals to live in caves, and these paneled walls, these tables laid with white linen and glass that twinkled in the candle light, these long French windows that looked out into a park where the sunset glowed through little glades, seemed as good as a fairy tale that comes true in the midst of rather sinister reality.

The country of France is in most perfect beauty just now, and all the lanes about the small villages where the British, French, and American troops are billeted are white with May blossoms above green bowers, and the air is drenched with the scent of it. There is rich pasture for cattle where the tall grass is tangled with dog daisies and clover and spread with sheets of buttercups, and some of the Allies' long-range guns are camouflaged not designedly by this luxuriant nature about them.

The May fly is tempting the trout to rise in this world of war, and the trout is tempting soldiers who are Izaak Waltons in their spare time and prefer the rod to the rifle when the enemy is inactive. French soldiers are passionate fishermen and will dangle a worm above a stream though high explosives menace their neighborhood; but some of the British and American officers and men are also devotees of the gentle sport, and I see them wandering along reedy banks, where birds sing in bushes near by an at night bull frogs croak bass music to the nightingale's lyric.

All this has nothing to do with war, but I like to write these things because they belong to the life of the Allies in their resting hours. In each man's mind now, however, is the knowledge that behind all this goodness of the fields the evil of the enemy is making ready for another onslaught, and that out of a blue sky or a cloudy one the crash of battle will soon come again.

That thought is in the background of all one's mental processes, and even in casual conversation or careless laughter; for when the next battle begins it will be a life and death struggle in which all the allied strength will be challenged.

Hail of Poison Shells Pours on British; Haig's Men Carry Out Effective Raids

LONDON, May 26.—Heavy shelling of the British lines, particularly with gas projectiles, is reported in Field Marshal Haig's official communications of today. It has been especially intense in the Villers-Bretonneux sector (southeast of Amiens) and west of Hinges, (northeast of Bethune, on the Lys front.)

The British carried out a number of raids yesterday and last night, taking numerous prisoners and several machine guns, and have repulsed a number of German raids.

French troops north of Bailleul last night drove off a raiding party.

Following is the night report.

During the night a hostile raid was repulsed by the French troops in the sector north of Bailleul. Shelling, repeated last night in the Villers-Bretonneux sector, was heavy, consisting of gas shells. There was heavy gas shelling also this morning west of Hinges.

The day report reads:

A party of our troops raided the enemy's trenches south of Bucquoy in daylight yesterday and captured fourteen prisoners and two machine guns. During the night other successful raids were carried out by us east of Hebuterne and south of Neuville-Vitasse, resulting in the capture of fifteen prisoners and a machine gun.

Hostile raiding parties were repulsed last night in the neighborhood of Sailly-le-Sec, Bucquoy, Ablainzeville, Festubert, and Merris.

The enemy's artillery has shown somewhat increased activity, particularly in the Villers-Bretonneux and Dernancourt sectors, in the neighborhood of Bucquoy, and between Nieppe Wood and Meteren.

An official statement on aerial operations issued tonight says:

There were only a few flying intervals Saturday, during which over 300 bombs were dropped on billets in the neighborhood of Armentières and Merville, an ammunition dump at Varssenaare and on the Bruges Docks.

In air fighting eight hostile machines were brought down and two were disabled. Another was brought down by machine gun fire from the ground. None of our machines is missing.

During a short period at night permitting bombing six tons of bombs were dropped on Peronne, Bapaume, and Maricourt. All of our planes returned.

French Artillery Is Active.

PARIS, May 26.—Artillery duels of considerable intensity took place last night along the French front southeast of Amiens, in the region of Hangard Wood and south of the Avre, and continued north and south of that stream today.

There was no infantry action today.

The Germans last night attempted a raid on French posts in the Orvillers-Sorel sector, between Montdidier and Lassigny, but failed of their purpose, as they did in similar attempts in Champagne and in the Vosges region. Prisoners were taken by the French during patrols.

The day official report reads:

Our own and the enemy's artillery developed great activity in the region of Hangard Wood and south of the Avre. A German thrust, preceded by a violent bombardment, upon French posts in the Orvillers-Sorel sector was without result for the enemy. Other German attempts in Champagne and in the Vosges region failed.

French patrolling detachments brought in prisoners, notably in the region of the Aliette.

There is nothing to report from the remainder of the front.

The War Office announcement issued tonight says:

There was no infantry action, but there was artillery activity at some points north and south of the Avre.

GUNS BUSIER, BERLIN SAYS.

Reports Increased Artillery Activity in Several Sectors.

BERLIN, May 26, (via London.)—The official communication from General Headquarters tonight says:

South of Nieuport Canal and on both sides of Dixmude we captured seventy Belgians in small operations.

The artillery fire, which continued moderate throughout the day, became livelier in some sectors of the battlefront. After darkness set in there was a considerable increase in the firing at times in the Kemmel region, south of the Somme, and between Moreuil and Montdidier.

Near Bucquoy several British attacks failed. In other sectors, also, there was lively enemy reconnoitring activity.

West of Montdidier Americans, in the Aliette region French, and on the southern bank of the Aisne, northeast of La Neuville, British were taken prisoners.

The War Situation

BY THE MILITARY EXPERT OF THE NEW YORK TIMES.

No matter how hard pressed for men the Germans may find themselves in the west as the result of their offensive operations, it is almost positive that for some time at least they will not be able to withdraw from the Russian theatre any great number of the troops who are at present there.

German efforts in the east take a variety of forms. In a general sense, it is a colossal piece of police work. Whatever is there, and it does not seem to be much, Germany wants and purposes to get if possible. In the meantime she does not purpose to see it destroyed if it can be prevented. To be more specific, her first task is to keep the various discordant elements from uniting against a common foe. There are many such elements. In particular the Poles and the Ukrainians are struggling, the former to prevent the transfer of the Cholm region to Ukraine, the latter to obtain it as provided for in the treaty with Germany. In addition the Bolsheviki are struggling with the Ukrainians to prevent this country from becoming a German province.

There are, of course, the numerous other factions, all engaged in civil war in the various parts of the empire, each of whom Germany is in some measure supporting so as to keep them at one another's throats. Germany's purpose is to permit them to wear themselves out in this internal strife, and when this time arrives, to step in herself and swallow them all.

That there is a certain difficulty in this procedure is evidenced from the news of this morning from the Ukraine country. A Polish army corps, apparently under capable leadership, was engaged for several days with a German division, and seemingly obtained a decision. This may, of course, be only temporary, as Germany still has enough men on the Russian front to send reinforcements should they be needed. But the mere fact that there are bodies of men in Russia armed and organized sufficiently to make such a fight indicates that in the present stage, at least, Germany still has trouble on her hands in this country.

This was, of course, inevitable. There is not an armed element in Russia that Germany, through bad faith and broken agreements, has not antagonized. There will doubtless be considerable opposition to her peaceful assimilation of Western Russia. But sooner or later, unless she is interfered with by a unifying, at least to some degree, of the forces that are now hostile to one another, she must succeed. A mob cannot contend against an organized, disciplined military force. The duty of the Allies, then, becomes evident. They must furnish the standard behind which the Russians will stand. The Allies, and they alone, are in position to furnish Russia with a common cause, a common leader who will appeal to the majority of all parties, (except possibly the Bolsheviki,) a common purpose on which they can unite and for which they can merge their difficulties. It can be found unquestionably.

The time is ripe for some principle of unification. Germany cannot unite them, since no one will trust a German leader, even though his pledged word may be passed. The Allies are under no such suspicion. If, therefore, the Allies find the way out, find the shibboleth which will bring unity for a common cause, the Russians may not be able to get back into the war in any such way as they were before the revolution, but they will be able to pin down in the east a much greater force than is there now, and thus make the work in the west that much easier.

To delay will produce the same disastrous results which followed the German invasion of Serbia. The Allies' tardiness in this case is well remembered. With full notice of Germany's intention, with knowledge weeks in advance of the German and Austrian concentration at Orsova, the Allies made no move. They merely watched Germany's preparation with apparently no realization that they had any interest in Serbia at all. That part of the Oriental Railroad which spanned the gap between Belgrade and Nish, the bridge over which Germany could pass from Hungary to her allies of the Near East, was the most important stretch of communications in the world.

Had the Allies sent men to hold it, had they prevented this bridge from falling into German control, Rumania would never have been defeated, Bulgaria would, had she entered the war at all, which is doubtful, have been quickly disposed of, Turkey would have been forced into a separate peace, and the back door of Hungary would have been thrown wide open to invasion. In this case, the Allies would have probably won the war in 1916, or surely in 1917, when a combined invasion of Austria from the west by Italy and from the east by Serbia and the other Allies would have torn Austria asunder.

Delay now in the case of Russia may be equally disastrous. Just as they knew what was going on at Orsova, the Allies know now what is going on in Russia. And working from known premises, the Versailles conference should be able to work out a solution.

BULGARIANS FIRED ON EMPEROR'S TRAIN

Royal Coaches Arrive at Vienna in a Dilapidated Condition from Attacks.

GENEVA, May 26.—The train bearing the Austrian Emperor and Empress from Constantinople, where they had been on a brief visit, reached Vienna yesterday in a dilapidated condition. Advices from the Swiss frontier town of Buchs give additional details to the reports previously received here of the attacks on the Austrian royalties.

The train came by way of Sofia and was stoned by Bulgarian troops. Even some rifle shots were fired, and several members of the royal entourage were injured by glass from broken windows.

Not a cheer was heard when the Austrian royal couple passed through Bulgarian stations, there being only comparatively small military demonstrations.

TEUTONS MAKE WOOD CLOTH

LONDON, April 30, (Associated Press.)—A Government trade paper contains a report from the British Consul General at Zurich of the appearance in Germany of a wood pulp fibre called cellulon as an efficient substitute for jute, cotton and other fibres. Swiss spinners are closely watching the developemnt of this textile substitute.

The British Consul has seen a sample of the cloth made from cellulon and describes it as extremely strong, although it is made directly from wood pulp.

TO TELL TRUTH ABOUT ITALY

Bureau for Authentic Information to be Opened Here Today.

A bureau of information on Italian affairs opens today at 501 Fifth Avenue. Its Director, Dr. Felice Ferrero for nine years has been the New York correspondent of Carriere della Sera of Milan. For nine years before coming to this country Dr. Ferrero, ever since his college graduation, represented his paper in Berlin and on special missions to Austria-Hungary and the Balkan countries, to France, to Great Britain, to Belgium, and to the Scandinavian countries.

The main purpose of the bureau, as described by Dr. Ferrero, is to act as a clearing house for authentic Italian information.

"It is not our purpose," said Dr. Ferrero, "to enter into any widespread Italian propaganda in this country, except in so far as the dissemination of authorized and interesting information on Italy's participation in the war and on affairs in Italy as affected by the war may be construed as propaganda.

GERMANY TO STOP DEPORTING PRISONERS

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, May 26.—The International Committee of the Red Cross Society published today a statement of the principles involved in the Franco-German convention regarding the exchange of prisoners, which came into effect May 15. The committee now appeals to the remaining belligerent governments to conclude similar agreements. All military prisoners are to be exchangeable "head for head and rank for rank" after eight months' confinement.

All prisoners over 45, or over 40 in case of parents of at least three children, are returnable after eighteen months, regardless of numbers and rank.

Reprisals upon prisoners can only be carried out after the lapse of clear months from the day of notification to the political department of the Swiss Red Cross.

Even more important, however, are the terms of the Franco-German agreement regarding civilian prisoners. Roughly speaking, this category is abolished. Civilian inhabitants of the enemy have the right of returning home or of remaining at a fixed address. Deportations are abolished. The inhabitants of occupied territory may be forced to do certain work, but only in the immediate neighborhood of their own homes. They may be removed for economic or military reasons, but not outside their own country.

As stated, it is not clear whether the Franco-German convention obliges Germany to allow deportees from Northern France to return to their homes, whether, in fact, the clauses regarding the treatment of the inhabitants of occupied areas are intended to be retrospective or have been merely signed with a view to possible contingencies. Or is Germany adopting a humanitarian policy? Her recent moves on the questions of the employment of poison gas and air raids on towns outside the war zone, and her new line of conduct toward civilian prisoners, indicate her discovery that in the long run it pays best to stick to treaties.

BURST OF ENEMY FIRE LASTED A WHOLE DAY

Towns Between Arras and Albert Drenched — British Guns Keep Up Incessantly.

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, May 26, (via Ottawa.)—Since Saturday evening the fire of the enemy artillery has shown a marked increase at various places along the British front. Villers-Bretonneux, (south of the Somme;) the Scarpe Valley, (east of Arras,) and the towns of Auchonvillers, Englebelmer, Mailly-Maillet, and Martinsart, all between Albert and Arras, have been bombarded with gas and high-explosive shells. There have also been prolonged outbursts of intense gunfire from Festubert to the Yser in Flanders.

The uproar died away late today. There is no reason to assume that the bombardments heralded an imminent resumption of heavy fighting.

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN FRANCE, May 26, (Associated Press.)—This was another of the days indicated by German prisoners as the date they understood as set for the renewal of the German offensive. The lull still continues, however, and, apart from a general increase in the fire of the hostile artillery, especially in the north, there is no change in the situation.

The Allies have persisted in the assumption that any moment might bring an attack, and have been carrying out counteroperations religiously. Day and night their artillery has periodically deluged German concentration points with high explosives of all calibres, and the statements of prisoners indicate that this intense fire is causing much anguish in the enemy ranks.

The correspondent spent last night in the Kemmel sector and saw an exhibition of British and French methods. From 10 o'clock onward the allied gunners were pounding the Germans all along the Flanders front, and just before daybreak today—the hour an attack might be expected to develop—they put down a tremendous barrage, which was maintained for some time before it gradually eased off to ordinary gunfire.

Allied Raiders Excel the Germans.

LONDON, May 26.—"Every day which passes without witnessing a renewal of the terrific struggle finds the Allies better prepared to withstand the shock," says a dispatch from Reuter's correspondent at British headquarters in France. "Gradually the great tactical and strategic advantages of unity of command are developing, with the result that confidence regarding the result never was so high.

"Meanwhile the oncoming American troops, whose steady tramping makes an almost monotonous cadence, give reassurance that our armies are by no means waiting passively the resumption of the German attack. Day and night they are taking heavy toll of enemy man power, harassing communications, and apparently even causing the uneasy impression to grow in his ranks that the initiative has passed to the Allies.

"I believe it is a fact that the German troops do not like to raid our positions at all because they know so many of these enterprises fail to reach our line, which means that the raiders have had a pretty bad time.

"The temperamental difference between the British and overseas soldiers and the Germans accounts for the vastly disproportionate success of our raids as compared with theirs. They imitate our methods, for systematic raiding was introduced into the war by the Canadians; but imitation cannot reproduce the essential human factor.

"A prisoner from the 11th Reserve Division who was captured near Meteren stated that the morale of the German troops was getting very low because of the poor quality of their rations. He said stories of rich food booty behind our lines were being freely circulated in order to stimulate the men for the coming renewal of the offensive."

FOOD CUT IMPELS TEUTONS TO STRIKE

Picardy, any attempt on her part to renew the offensive on a serious scale may bring about disaster.

Discontent in Vassal States.

"In spite of all official trumpetings of beneficent results in the way of greater unity of the Central Empires as a result of the recent conference between Emperors William and Charles, the fact remains that Charles, who immediately after the imperial meeting was sent down to Bulgaria and Turkey as the representative of the German Kaiser, had an extremely indifferent reception in the vassal States. Near Philippopolis, on the way back from Constantinople, his train was stoned by a large number of Bulgar soldiers, and noisy manifestations in favor of peace occurred in other parts of the country during his visit.

"Altogether, the Germans are, as General Foch asserted weeks ago, exactly in the position where he wished them to be. If they do not resume the offensive they cannot escape the contingency that the people of both empires will construe the fact as a plain admission that they have lost the power to do so. If they resume the battle there is more than a possibility that the result will be another serious check, the moral effect of which, so far as internal conditions are concerned, will be the same as if they had not struck at all.

"One by one all the great German trumps have failed. The submarine and the aerial bombardments have proved ineffective. There remains only the army.

"That the enemy will be forced to make a last desperate play with his remaining strong card, in spite of the splendid hand of trumps held by the Allies, appears inevitable. That he will have to do so before June 17, when the pinch of hunger, the most powerful of all his adversaries, will inevitably be felt more keenly than ever, is regarded here as mathematically certain."

PARIS GUESSES ABOUT DELAY.

One Critic Suggests the Germans Are Driving at Allies' Nerves.

PARIS, May 26.—A cartoon in this morning's Victoire shows two German prisoners standing on a quay watching the arrival of a succession of American transports flying the Stars and Stripes. One prisoner says to the other:

"What is Hindenburg waiting for before making his offensive?"

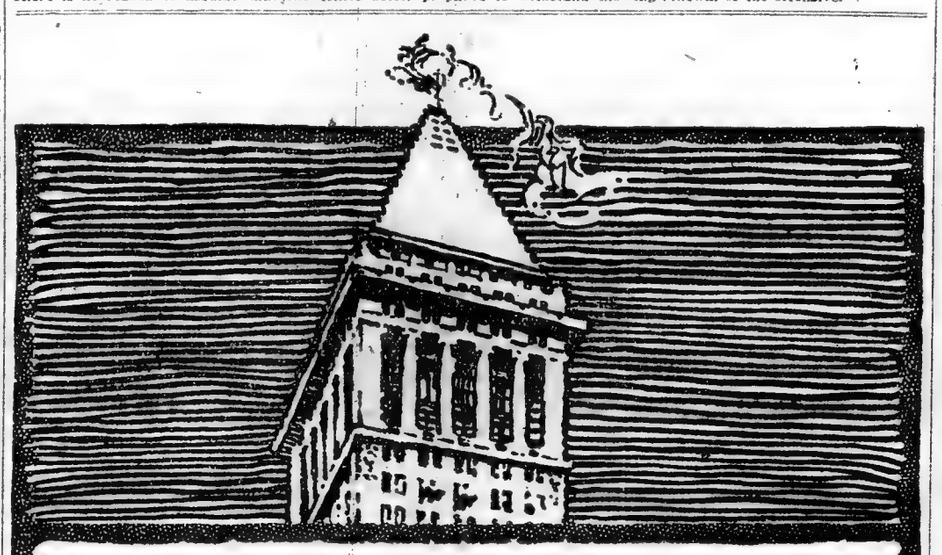
The same question has been occupying the Paris press and the military critics during the last week. One of the critics expresses the belief that the German command is waiting for cloudy weather, saying that the allied air superiority makes the German movement impossible without such weather conditions. Another critic advances the theory that the Germans are occupied in clearing the obstructions from naval bases recently blocked by the British.

A third critic, who is not alone in his opinion, argues that in delaying the resumption of the offensive the enemy is really making an offensive which is directed against French "nerves," counting on the enervating period of suspense to undermine the morale of the troops to a point where a surprise attack would result in a crushing blow.

German internal politics, according to another critic, is what is causing the delay, as the final victory on which the Germans are counting must not, for dynastic interests, be won under the leadership of the Crown Prince of Bavaria, but the disposition of the army must be changed so as to allow the Prussian Crown Prince to have the glory of commanding in the decisive action.

Yet another theory is that a renewal of the offensive is only awaiting the moment when the Austrians shall be able to make a simultaneous offensive in Italy, which moment is still likely to require days, if not weeks.

Each theory may contain its element of truth, but one thing is certain—that the suspense is trying, not so much to the men at the front, who are always actively occupied, even when the official communications report the front lines calm, as to the country behind, which is condemned to forced waiting.



Benefits of the Trade Acceptance

At the recent war convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce, it was the testimony of business men who had given it a thorough trial that the "trade acceptance" makes

—more business	—improved accounting
—better customers	—larger profits
—fairer prices	—smaller losses
—surer collections	—less friction

Do you not believe that it would pay you to let us go over this subject with you and see if the trade acceptance method might not be applied profitably to your credit operations?

The NOISELESS TYPEWRITER

You'll miss typewriter noise like you miss a headache

THE first morning with the Noiseless in your office seems blessedly unreal. Such peaceful quiet! Conversation in ordinary modulated tones. Low-voiced dictation with other typewriters busily writing nearby. No nerve-racking clatter anywhere.

Then the telephone rings. Mr. Blank wants to talk to you. "Please speak louder!" he shouts. "I can't hear you for these infernal typewriters."

A week later you call on Mr. Blank at his office. No wonder he couldn't hear. You are almost deafened by the racket. Your conference is smothered and punctuated with a clackety-clack-clack. Clear thinking is impossible.

Meanwhile your own office is running with a smooth, quiet efficiency that amazes you. There is more cheerfulness, less nervous irritation. More work seems to get done in less time. Your stenographer works quietly at your elbow instead of being herded somewhere off in a separate room.

We'll gladly put the Noiseless in any office for demonstration. Simply telephone or write for appointment. No obligation is involved.

GERMAN DRIVE WON BY NEW METHODS

Gen. Maurice Discusses the Chances of Foe's Success in New Offensive.

LIMIT TO ANY ADVANCE

And the Question of a "Break-Through" Depends on the Defenders' Reserves.

By MAJOR GENERAL SIR FREDERICK MAURICE.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 26.—We are very far from knowing the true story of what happened on March 21, and it is likely that we shall have to possess our souls in patience for some time yet.

The public is most anxious to know the result of the promised inquiry into the reverse which our Fifth Army suffered, but inquiries into events of a great battle, while war is still raging, are a slow and difficult business. Reports and evidence have to be collected from a large number of officers who are fully occupied with the pressing needs of the present situation.

Many important witnesses may and probably have been killed or captured, and the process of sifting such evidence as is obtained is laborious. We, however, are able to piece together sufficient information as to the methods which the enemy adopted to enable us to compare them generally with our own and with the French methods and to see how far they are likely to be repeated with success.

The characteristics of the German attack of last March were the length of the front of attack, the dense massing of infantry at points at which it was sought to penetrate, a short but very intense bombardment not carried to any great depth, and the use made of fog or mist to screen his infantry advance.

Relative Front and Depth.

In March the Germans attacked upon a fifty-mile front, which was extended eventually on the southern battlefield—that is, leaving the Flanders battle out of account altogether—to a front of seventy miles. In our most successful offensive, the battle of Arras of April, 1917, we attacked on a front of eleven miles, and in the battle of Messines and Wytschaete Ridge our front was one of about seven miles.

One of the lessons of numerous attacks on intrenched positions which have been carried out during this war appears to be that when preparations are adequate, the force sufficient, and attack successful there is a limit to the depth of advance possible, and that this limit has a definite relation to the length of front attacked.

At Arras our victory on a front of eleven miles gave us a depth of rather more than five miles of ground. At Wytschaete a seven-mile attack gave us about three. The German attack on a seventy-mile front between Arras and the Oise yielded them a maximum advance of about thirty-five miles.

Of course the limit to the attacker's advance depends upon the defender having reserves in sufficient numbers to throw into the fight. If the defender's reserves are exhausted before the impetus of the attack is checked, a break through cannot be prevented.

We know, as I have already pointed out, that Foch has been carefully nursing his reserves, and therefore this experience of the past gives us some measure of the worst which can befall us in the future. We know also that we are now better placed in many respects to meet an attack than we were in March and that therefore there are no present grounds for supposing this worst will happen, though it would be contrary to general experience if the enemy did not make some gain.

Still Enamored of Masses.

The enemy has adhered throughout the war to his belief that decisive results cannot be obtained except by employing infantry in mass. Again and again he has paid a bitter price for that belief, but the experience of the recent battle shows that in the main it is justified.

Artillery, aircraft, machine guns, tanks, and many new weapons which this war has produced are all valuable adjuncts, and many of them will certainly increase in value as technical and mechanical difficulties are overcome and experience is gained, but nothing has yet replaced the man with his rifle as the prime means of gaining victory, and, therefore, if we are to be victorious, there is a definite point beyond which we cannot afford to allow our infantry to be reduced.

In these respects German methods have shown no important change. What was new in the recent battle was the character of the bombardment and the use made of fog.

Hitherto both we and the French have relied upon a prolonged bombardment, carried out in weather which favored observation and accurate shooting over a large area of ground. The disadvantage of this form of attack is that the ground is so destroyed by the artillery that the infantry advance, and particularly the pushing up of reinforcements of munitions and of supplies, becomes extraordinarily difficult.

The Germans appear to have overcome this difficulty, partly by not destroying the surface of the ground so completely or to the same depth, and partly by sending their infantry into battle loaded to their utmost carrying capacity with food and ammunition.

Further, they appear to have brought their "reinforcing divisions before the attack started very close up behind those in the first line, and when the latter could go no further, either owing to their losses or to want of food and to physical exhaustion, to have passed the reinforcing divisions through them, the men in these, too, being loaded up with food and ammunition.

By this means the calls on transport were greatly reduced and the congestion on the roads became a congestion of men and not of vehicles.

We have sometimes, and with a considerable degree of success, created an artificial fog on the day of a battle by means of smoke and gas discharged after the artillery had done its chief work, but nothing that man can do in this respect can replace nature at her best. The enemy on March 21 appears to have brought up at the last moment a large reinforcement of medium and heavy artillery, and, relying upon weight of metal and intensity rather than upon accuracy, to have deluged our front system with a rain of high explosive shells.

Then, under cover of a fog, which blanketed our machine guns and artillery, upon the fire of which our defensive system in a great measure depended, he broke in mass through gaps in our thin line.

The enemy deserves all credit for this use to which he put the help of nature, but during the coming months, at any rate, it is highly improbable that he will again obtain her help in the same manner.

The combination of an abnormally dry Winter which made the ground suitable for an infantry attack at an unusually early period of the year and rendered passable the marshy valleys of the Oise and Somme, which would normally have formed very serious military obstacles, with days of continuous and dense fog, gave the enemy an opportunity of which he made the fullest use, but which will not in all probability be presented to him in like manner in the coming battle.

HEAVY GUNFIRE IN ITALY.

Most Intense on the Trentino and Lower Piave Fronts.

ROME, May 26.—Intensive fighting, both by the artillery and by the infantry in local operations, occurred yesterday at several points along the Austro-Italian front, today's War Office report shows. The gunfire was particularly strong in the Tonale area, Trentino front, and along the Lower Piave. The text of the statement reads:

The artillery fighting, which was normal along nearly all the front, became particularly intense in the Tonale area and fairly lively on the Lower Piave.

On the southern slopes of Sasso Rosso, in the Brenta Valley, attacks by hostile patrols, accompanied by violent machine gun and rifle fire and hand bombing, were repulsed by the fire of our advanced posts and batteries. At Grave di Papodopoli skirmishes between reconnoitering parties took place.

Our own and allied airplanes, flying low, directed machine gun fire at and bombarded enemy troops, batteries, and billets in the Asiago Basin and along the Piave.

ENEMY AT FULL STRENGTH

Has Numerically the Same Forces as Before, but of Inferior Quality.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, May 25.—The air is sultry and the sky heavy with clouds, and still the expected storm does not burst. Old folk and young folk tending the many-colored fields of France, clerks and shopkeepers in cities, men feeding blast furnaces, men driving trains and women varnishing shell-cases turn to one another with the bleak questions: "When will it begin? Why does it not begin?" But on the front there is only a strange quietude, a waiting temper—patient and fatalistic, you may say, but warmer than those words imply, with something of the fire and promise of this May sunshine.

The pause has been abnormal. The first act of the German offensive, begun on March 21, may be said to have ended with that month, for in Artois, from Vimy Ridge by the Somme and Ancre, to the Oise there has been scarcely any change in the front since then. In Picardy the front has been stabilized since April 4, and in Flanders since the end of April.

It becomes evident that this northern extension of the offensive was originally a feint. The event shows once more that it is only in their fully prepared efforts that the Germans are at their best, and that the Allies, even with a marked inferiority of force, beat them when it is a question of spontaneous initiative or rapid adaptation to new circumstances.

The second act gave the enemy nothing like so much as the first. They gained some ground we could ill afford to lose, but nothing vital, and only at an exorbitant price. The element of surprise had been exploited to its utmost; the greatest striking force the German Empire could hope to put into the field had been spent without sparing, and no result approaching the decisive had been obtained. On the contrary, so far from being cut asunder, the Allies, while suffering losses lighter than those of the enemy, had accomplished in the crisis of the battle a unity not only of their high command, but of action and organization through out their ranks, which has increased and will be further perfected. At every stage the German attack has become less and the allied defense more effective.

This is the barest outline of the history known to the French soldier in a hundred intimate episodes which prove to him that, whatever may be his personal fate, the cause is safe, because he and his fellows and their leaders are better men than Prussia and her subordinates can now show.

Save for the brave men who have gone and who did not fall in vain, what we have lost in these two months is less than we have gained. I do not wish to take a merely comfortable view of the situation. It remains grave enough to require all the devotion and energy the men and women of the allied nations can put into their various tasks.

Last German Draft from the East.

The peace of Bucharest liberated another body of German soldiers for service in the west, practically the last complement that can be drawn from the eastern field. Some of the lightly wounded of the first phase of the battle will now be sufficiently recovered to be thrown in again.

With these two quantities and a further exchange of troops between active and quiet sectors, it will have been possible to constitute a new mass of attack approximately as strong in numbers, although not in quality, as that with which the offensive began. I shall not be very far wrong in conjecturing that of a total of just over 200 divisions in the west, the German command is today holding about eighty in general reserve.

Already these divisions may be secretly on the way to their "jumping-off places." For five or six weeks the roads and railways have been preparing for their passage. Heavy guns have been brought up to new emplacements, and the thousand and one details of so formidable an operation have been worked out. The clash will be commensurate with the means; that is, it will far surpass any powers of description.

To say in no boastful spirit that the French await it without fear or doubt of the result is merely to record a fact. They do not believe that what will be can be as bad as what they have already gone through; and then, as they tell you, there is Foch, become in these days a very Joffre for silence. Sooner or later, when the balance of forces is sufficiently turned, the silent Foch will speak such words as the silent Joffre spoke beyond the Marne, and to yet greater purpose.

DEMAND A FREE BOHEMIA.

Catholic Parties Take Stand—Austrian Socialists to Convene.

AMSTERDAM, May 26.—The Executive Committee of the United Catholic Parties of Bohemia has decided to issue a manifesto demanding constitutional independence for "the Bohemian lands under the Hapsburgs," according to a Prague dispatch printed in the Dutch newspapers.

LONDON, May 26.—A great Socialist congress will convene in Vienna on May 30, in which representatives from all over Austria will take part, according to the Vienna Arbeiter Zeitung, as quoted in an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Copenhagen.

BOMBARDMENTS IN BALKANS

PARIS, May 26.—An official dispatch from the Balkan front, dated May 25, says:

West of Doiran and on the right bank of the Vardar our batteries shelled enemy artillery positions and works. There were artillery duels around Dobropolje and raids by Serbian troops in the region of Vetrenik. West of Lake Ochrida the enemy bombarded our positions. He attempted without result an attack against our posts on the right bank of the Skumbi.

SAY GIANT U-BOAT IS 450 FEET LONG

Can Make 28 Knots on Surface, Carry 76 Torpedoes, and Dive in 5 Minutes.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, May 27.—With reference to the Admiralty announcement of the destruction of a German cruiser submarine, The Chronicle's naval correspondent says that, according to statements in the Swedish papers last July, based on the authority of German technical journals, the new German supersubmarines are 450 feet long and thirty-six feet broad, and had 20,000 horse power. They can make twenty-eight knots above the surface and fifteen knots submerged. They carry seventy-five torpedoes, 150 mines, and six guns, and are capable of diving in five minutes.

The correspondent says that it is certain that the guns carried by these vessels are six-inch.

DOOM OF THE U-BOAT IN AUGUST PREDICTED

American Navy Captain Quoted as Forecasting It Will Be 'Compietely Dammed.'

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 26.—The Allies absolutely have the U-boat under control, according to Dr. M. L. Raney, librarian of the Johns Hopkins University, who has just returned from Paris, where he was the sole representative of the American Library Association Overseas War Service. His remarks concerning the U-boat situation are based upon statements made to him by high naval authorities.

"The U-boat situation, according to Admiral Sims, is absolutely under control," he said. "The construction of tonnage is meeting the destruction. Captain T. L. Wilson, commanding officer of the flagship upon which I visited vessels of the American Navy in French waters, said that by the end of August we should have the U-boats completely dammed.

"One of the most important arms of the American service in France is the hydroaeroplane. Within two months the number of hydroaeroplanes has been doubled. The submarine practically has refused to function on the French coast. The Hun U-boat commanders have a wholesome fear of the American gunners, whom they know to be deadly shots.

"The American Navy has done and is doing magnificent service in French waters and in every other section to which it has been assigned. Too much cannot be said in its praise, and if the real facts were known the American people would be astounded at the extent of our naval operations.

"The only question is whether the home folk are safe. Absolute faith can be put in all of the armies in the field. There will be no falling down there. There is not one of our boys who does not know that there is only one way through—that the Hun must get his licking.

"Nothing has sent such a thrill through the trenches as the news following the recent offensive on the western front that America has wakened up and is ready to strike a blow commensurate with her size."

U-BOATS SUNK IN MAY WILL SHOW INCREASE

Leygues Says America and England in April Built 40,000 Tons More Than Losses.

PARIS, May 26.—As proof that the Allies are rapidly overcoming the submarine menace, Georges Leygues, the Minister of Marine, informed the Army and Navy War Committees of the Senate yesterday that Great Britain and the United States alone had constructed in April 40,000 tons more shipping than was sunk by the enemy.

The Minister declared also that the means employed to rid the seas of submarines had become increasingly effective since January and had given decisive results.

The Minister pointed out the tremendous strides recently made by the Allies in repairing ships damaged by torpedoes or mines and declared that co-ordination between the allied nations had become so smooth in the last four months that the tonnage restored to the sea exceeded 500,000 tons weekly.

Great Britain, he said, repaired 598,000 tons in one week recently, while France effected repairs on 260,000 tons in one month. The increased building and more efficient and speedier repair work were constantly bringing better results in the transport of troops and supplies.

As to the increasing destruction of submarines, which was constant, said the Minister, the figures for April were excellent, showing an increase over the preceding months, but were far surpassed by the results known to have been attained thus far in May.

Jacques Dumesnil, Under Secretary of Aeronautics, announced to the committeemen that the program, for the construction of naval machines prepared in 1917 had already been equaled in 1918, but that a new and more intensive effort was planned.

REPLACING DUTCH SHIPS.

Germany Reported to Have Lent Two to Atone for Torpedoing.

AMSTERDAM, May 26.—Two German ships will sail in the near future from the Dutch East Indies to Holland as Belgian relief ships, according to a Rotterdam telegram to the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courrant. The German vessels, the dispatch says, have been placed at the disposal of Holland by the German Government to replace two of the six Dutch ships which were torpedoed in the English Channel on Feb. 22, 1917, when an entire fleet of Dutch merchantmen, supposedly free from submarine depredations, was attacked by a German U-boat and all of them either destroyed or badly damaged.

By an agreement reached several months ago Germany undertook, under certain conditions, to replace the lost vessels.

Ruth Law Has Not Disappeared.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—Reports have been in circulation all over the country in the last three months that Miss Ruth Law, the aviatrix, had disappeared. Miss Law was in Washington in the latter part of April taking part in the Liberty Loan rally and flew several times under the auspices of the Liberty Loan Committee. She also sold Liberty bonds at an official booth on the White Lot near the White House.

Miss Law, who has been flying under a license granted by the War Department, arrived in Washington on the afternoon of April 23. She made a flight over Pennsylvania Avenue on April 25, and during the local Liberty Loan parade on the following day gave exhibition flights near the White House.

COME FOR NEW DESTROYERS

American Navy Officers Say These Craft Will End U-Boat Menace.

AN ATLANTIC PORT, May 26.—Officers of the United States Navy arrived today from England to join newly constructed destroyers. They confirmed reports of the successful warfare waged by the American and British Navies on the German submarines.

They said that patrol boats and submarines were taking part in the campaign as well as the destroyers, and that when there was a sufficient number of the vessels to protect all the convoys across the Atlantic the U-boat menace would be a thing of the past, and hunting them with depth charges and howitzers would be regarded as a nautical sport. When this had been accomplished, they said, the navies would turn to the Mediterranean, and render its waters safe for transports and supply ships.

SAW SUBMARINE RAMMED.

Transport Captain Says Liner's Skipper Will Get £1,000.

AN ATLANTIC PORT, May 26.—The Captain of a transport, who arrived here today from England, confirmed the report of the ramming of a German submarine off the English coast several daysago. He said that the Captain of the liner would receive £1,000 for sinking the U-boat, which was one of the latest type and carried a crew of seventy officers and men.

According to the story told by the chief officer, who was on the bridge at the time with the Captain, the eighteen German sailors rescued by a lifeboat dropped by the liner were afterward picked up by a British destroyer which reached the scene a few minutes after the submarine disappeared.

The commander signaled to the Captain of the transport not to stop, as it might be dangerous.

AMERICAN ARMY IN PICARDY READY

but if the Y. M. C. A. authorities realized the prejudice thus caused in the minds of the soldiers they would surely take vigorous action in the matter. The complaint may or may not be justified, but one certainly hears it constantly, and authoritative denunciation of the practice would remove a stumbling block to Y. M. C. A. usefulness.

In justice to the Y. M. C. A., it must be said that the soldiers of the French Moroccan division are immensely enthusiastic in its praise, and praise from France's finest soldiers is worth having. The Colonel of the Foreign Legion said that the members of the Y. M. C. A. unit with them had behaved magnificently during the heavy fighting around Villers-Bretonneux, and had spared themselves no danger or exhaustion in order to maintain the supply of cigarettes, fruit, and chocolate for the poilus in an area devoid of shelter and swept by shells and quick-firers.

Every officer of the division with whom I talked referred spontaneously to the subject with equal warmth, and it is not too much to say that the work of the five Y. M. C. A. units attached to the Moroccan Division—which, of course, is not composed of Moroccans, but of French colonial regiments which were stationed in Morocco before the war—has given the finest possible example of American courage, devotion, and generosity to men whose own record for bravery is unsurpassed in the whole French Army.

DR. MOTT DEFENDS Y. M. C. A.

Says Much Tobacco Is Given Free, and Denies Profit on Sales.

Reports from various war correspondents of THE NEW YORK TIMES that American soldiers at the front were considerably dissatisfied with the prices charged for tobacco by the Y. M. C. A. at its huts behind the lines were laid last night before Dr. John R. Mott, General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., who said that the organization gave away an enormous quantity of tobacco besides that which was sold.

It was the general practice, he said, to give cigarettes free of charge to soldiers in the front-line trenches or just leaving them, or in other emergencies. He estimated that the quantity thus given away last year by the Y. M. C. A. would exceed in value $1,500,000, in addition to the large quantities given for free distribution through the Y. M. C. A. by private individuals.

"This matter was looked into very carefully not long ago," said Dr. Mott last night, "and it should be made very clear that even when tobacco is sold at regular retail prices the Y. M. C. A. does not make any profit. The Quartermaster's department sells tobacco which it gets at Government rates and with free transportation, therefore the price is very low compared with that which the Y. M. C. A. has to charge even at cost.

"But if there is any profit made anywhere on individual sales, it is far more than wiped out by the tobacco and cigarettes which are given away.

"At the Y. M. C. A. dugouts immediately behind the front-line trenches coffee and tobacco are given free to the men actually holding the line, or to those who are just being relieved. In the course of the year this amounts to hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth. I have just returned from France, and while there I saw this practice being followed as to troops who were at the front or were coming away.
